the ocean beach on May 18. He declared that Ormiston entered the hotel about two minutes later.

Melville, a doorman at the hotel, also testified he saw the evangelist enter the place.

Mrs. McPherson had stated earlier in the day that Melville would fail to identify her and a statement previously made by Melville at Angelus temple was read into the records.

"You don't believe you saw someone else, a woman who looked like Mrs. McPherson," the statement read.

"No," Melville replied to his questioners at that time. "I have seen Mrs. McPherson dozens of times at her services and she baptized me and I thought it was her. I hope you can prove it was someone else."

In Klamath Falls

far, near whose home several of the attacks occurred, was chastised by the latest outbreak and told his men to "bring in the panther, dead or alive."

Many Detectives

Two hundred detectives, including the most resourceful and experienced in the department, were assigned to the hunt. They searched the neighborhood and town hall districts on foot and in automobiles but were unable to obtain even a good description of the man.

Friday night six policemen, dressed fashionably and carrying handbags stuffed with paper and automatic pistols in the folds of their clothing, were sent out to hunt the "panther" with a view. They were glittering jewels in the hope of attracting the raider to the attack.
