What Price Education?

Football looms large in the interest of the nation. It is associated almost wholly with our institutions of learning and is conceded the leader of sports, both in college and high school.

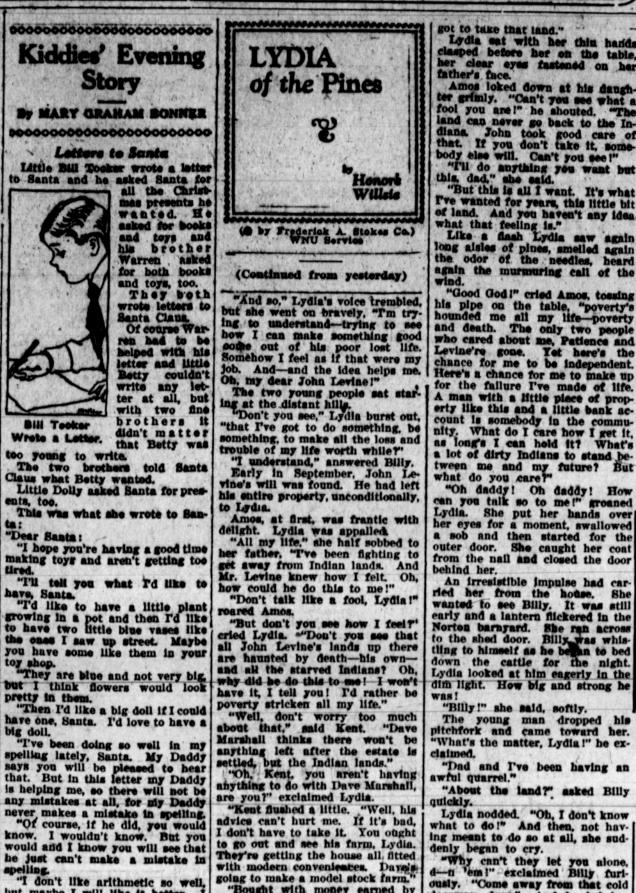

This leads to a speculation as to the relative position of the country's sports and its education. Education is the very life of the nation-sports its pastime. The former, like our water and air, is taken for granted and almost considered routine; the latter is dramatic, impulsive and full of motion.

We are not belittling the value of sports in the life of people. We recognize their unifying influence in our institutions. It is a healthful sign when our citizens grow in their love for outdoor play. There is a tendency, however, to indulge in these exercises and sports purely by proxy.

It is a fact that the nation's expenditure for spectacular sports makes the outlay for education look insignificant. We have recently completed the World Baseball Series which approached a million and a quarter gate receipts; our last big prize fight, two million dollars. This latter figure is but a fraction of the cost of the fight when the other expenses of the fans are estimated. The American public paid this price for a two-man combat that lasted a total of thirty-nine minutes, and yet in this country we spend but a billion and a half dollars yearly to train twenty-three million boys and girls for a fight that last an average of approximately thirty-nine years.

There is another angle to this viewpoint of relative value. A middle western metropolitan newspaper sold 50,000 more copies the morning after the Dempsey-Tunney fight than it did the morning after the election November 2nd. Sport news is. therefore, looked upon as a matter of great importance by the newspapers, and, based upon public demand, naturally so. As a specialized subject it increasingly outranks the space of any other department in the day's news. When the Corbett-Sullivan fight took place in 1892 a newspaper not overly devoted to sports printed more than seven columns about it during the two weeks immediatel preceding the contest. In 1923, for a like period provious to the Dempsey-Firpo battle, the same pape used thirty-eight columns. In the Dempsey-Tunne fight this year, the same paper used ninety columns No process of thinking can lead us to conclud that education has gained a corresponding em phasis. Nor will it, until we have a shiftnig of de mand on the part of the public.

Keep Your Mind Open

C. F. Kettering, vice president of the Genera Motors company, is a many sided man, and every side is brilliant. Not the least brilliant is hi rhetoric ability.

"Do not introduce the dangerous mental stat of completeness into your organizations," he told industrial executives of Detroit, meeting to observe National Management Week, "Let your men keep open to change-steady, regular development."

Herbert Hoover is sponsor for National Man agement Week. He thought there were too many types of the same article; too many types of bricks of various kinds of machinery, of automobile tires that this duplication ran all through industry caus ing needless expense and waste of labor and ma terial. He wanted standardization and his efforts to achieve it have met with much success. On this point, Mr. Kettering said:

"I do not want you to understand that I am opposed to standardization-I know all that it has done-but do not lock the front door."

What Mr. Kettering was warning against was such thorough standardization that progress would automatically stop. New devices would be taboo. There is a good moral in that thought, "Do not induce the mental state of completeness in your consciousness," it might be paraphrased. Be open to new ideas and new impressions.
