The World Heroes

It is interesting to note that the school children of the world, in electing the twelve greatest heroes of history, omitted the names of its outstanding military geniuses.

Distinguished service seems to have been the test by which choice was made rather than the possession of those high qualities of physical or moral courage which we usually associate with heroism.

The names in order of their choice are Louis Pasteur, Abraham Lincoln, Christopher Columbus, George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Woodrow Wilson, Florence Nightingale, Joan of Arc, Socrates, Johann Gutenberg, David Livingstone and George Stephenson.

Is there no place among the scientists for Galileo and Bacon and Darwin and Huxley, no place among the heroes of the American revolution for the Adamses and Jeffersons and Tom Paine, no place among the humanitarians for Father Damien, no place among the inventors for Morse and Bell and Daimler and for that matter Marconi and the Wright brothers and Edison?

About the only name on the list which defies duplication from any standpoint is that of Joan of Arc. She was unique in the world's history.

Science Scores Again

Science becomes daily more useful. One by one it is gradually ferreting out those "more things" than are dreamt of in our philosophy.

The demonstration was made by students at Colgate university. Subjects of the test were awakened after various sleep periods on different kinds of beds.

It was found that it took six calories to do the problem after eight hours on a soft bed and eleven after six hours.

This is all very interesting, but the thing which really charms us is discovery of the fact that there are persons, not mathematical abnormalities, who can really do a mental multiplication of 456 by 239 after any number of hours of sleep on any kind of a bed.

Christmas Seals

All for health—health for all. This is the message of the little Christmas seal with its crimson double cross, which adorns packages, letters and cards at Christmas time.

The sale in Jackson county is fostered by the Parent Teacher Association and the Anti-Tuberculosis association. Most of the money derived from the sale of the little seals is used to protect the health of our own children.

Have you purchased your seals? Have you contributed your mite to help make the world a better place to live? Have you fulfilled the spirit of the yuletide season by being thoughtful of your brothers?

If you haven't you should.

What Others Say (Albany Democrat) Down in Douglas county there has been formed a taxpayers league for the apparent purpose of telling the county court how it shall spend the big windfall it will receive in O. and C. land grant monies as a result of the Stanford law.

Today's prize for painting the Hly goes to Meebow, where a training school for clowns has just been established. The day's best retort tournament: A Kansas Teachers' College student, reading the headline, "Marie Sells," expressed the conviction that Marie was already here.

If you admire a writer, it is because he tells you things you already know. An optimist becomes a pessimist when he gets fired instead of getting a raise. The strength of both men and tea is not full drawn out until they have been in hot water. Legs are just legs, and they are not nearly so alluring as they used to be before we knew what they were. Has Beck says: "The territory under a man's hat is all the ground he should take to cultivate."

Children Watched what they used to be in my From Windows. They complain that the children are given too many privileges and are allowed to sit up too late and allowed too many parties. "Of course they may not have had you in mind, my grandchild, when they were talking."

They had considered themselves lucky. To them the roof of the city was like a little heaven and to many children. And the pavements were just as it was really fun to play right in the street. But best of all were the roofs. They were so filled with chimneys and little towers and towers which led down into the houses and skylights and other sorts of interesting objects.

CHAPTER 3 She-Tin-Tin awakened by an anti-mat and a high and loyal sense of duty that combined to form a signal much more compelling than any artificial clanking such as an alarm clock, rose at six o'clock sharp of a clear morning from the cool, clean floor mat that served her for a bed in the tiny kitchen of the Ford that on West Twenty-first Street, New York City. The saloon down, crossed out, the trunk and open corner of the room with soft radiance. Rinty gravely and with a dignified bearing, of his mask. Next he indulged in what he called a "backwash" in every well-bred and self-respecting dog's life of a physically brutish human's morning shower bath; he shook himself, vigorously and thoroughly, around by his characteristic stupidity about a "backwash" there isn't a thing. He had a friend of my father, you know I love you." She closed to him a minute longer on account of that.

It's Murrish. I haven't any doubt but evidence against him; but I've got good reasons to believe otherwise. He's got got some good reasons for all his high level. He's got got some good reasons for all his high level. He's got got some good reasons for all his high level.
