Why A Bank Account?

The usual reasons given for having a bank account include convenience, in the matter of a checking account; and the value of accumulating funds at interest which may be quickly available, when reference is made to a savings account.

But in both instances really the greatest benefit comes through establishing one's credit—a reputation for responsibility in money matters.

Anyone who manages to run a checking account with a growing balance, and who is known (to his or her banker) to be a persistent, regular saver, is establishing a personal credit standing that may always be counted an asset.

We invite you to use our banking service. You will find that of advantage, too.
