MARRIAGE MADE SIMPLE BY NEW SOVIET CODE; PROTECTION OF CHILDREN IS FEATURE OF LAW

MOSCOW, (UP)—Getting married in Russia is easier now than it was, but the state of being married has been made very much more burdensome. Russian men are thinking hard now before plunging into matrimony.

The new Soviet marriage code belted entirely the first reports that the Russians had abolished marriage. They have made common law marriages legal so that registration is no longer essential. But in this they have only written into formal form the decisions of Soviet judges everywhere in the past four years. The judges, exercising what is known as the "freedom of their revolutionary conscience" which enables them to fit the words of the laws to what seems to them fair and reasonable had made common-law marriages binding already. Now they are so in the words of the law as well.

So getting married is simpler than before. There is no longer the fuss and slight expense of registration. Instead, a mode of life suggesting wedlock is enough to prove a marriage and to entitle a wife to the various benefits of the married state. Registration now is only desirable because it is the simplest proof of marriage. It does not need the support of witnesses nor of documentary evidence.

But being married is more arduous on account of the new law. A father is saddled with the cost of maintaining his children until they are 18 years old and this responsibility remains with him even though he is separated from his wife. It is operating as a restraint on too impetuous experiments in wedlock. Not many Russians nowadays can support children for 18 years.

The new law, however, has laid on this burden both ways. The obligation of adult children to take care of their aged parents has been imposed on them, chiefly to free the state of the burden. And in the advantage of marriage.

ties in 1888, before the blue laws came in—directly from the bleachers while Casey still was at the bat.

"Fraud" "Fraud!" cried the maddened thousands, and the echo answered "fraud." But one scornful look from Casey and the multitude was awed.

This occurred immediately after the umpire had called the second strike upon Casey. In the subsequent excitement over the third strike the accusation was overlooked.

It is understood in Mudville that it was a grudge nursed by "Irish" Leonberg, who was bat-boy for the visiting nine on the afternoon in question, which caused the charges against Casey to be dragged after all these years. On his alligator farm in Arizona Leonberg said he was prepared to appear before Landis and testify that Casey's bat was loaded shortly before the game and Casey likewise.

"Loaded" "It was nothing unusual for ball players to be loaded in those days," commented the president of the present Mudville Nine. "But if the bat was, its news to me."

The dusty files of the Mudville Bogle contained a matter of fact account of the famous game upon which the pitiless spotlight of publicity now is turned.

muneration for his services or that of his helpers.

The friends of the Jesse Cooper family are grieved to learn of the passing of Mrs. Elizabeth Cooper, mother of Mr. Cooper. Mrs. Cooper was an interested part of the groups at the Christmas tree and entertainment at the community house. So her death, following so quickly a brief illness, comes as a shock to the district in which she lived.

The regular monthly meeting of the Upper Valley Community Club will be held in the club room at the Community House, January 1. As there is no president, owing to the resignation of Mrs. Gottsche, the nominating committee will have a name ready for the approval of the club.

The committee on community house affairs, wish to make public for the whole community their sincere thanks to Elmer Morrison who with the help of Merritt Randles and Milton Blesie, wired entirely our building. Mr. Morrison is an electrician of ability, so that the power company was willing that he should take complete charge. All wires are run in conduits, on the same as any building in which there are public gatherings. This work was done entirely at night as Mr. Morrison is very busy during the days which made it doubly hard, and still he refused to take any re-
