SHARE WITH OTHERS DAY

SUNDAY

"CAST THY BREAD UPON THE WATERS, FOR THOU SHALL FIND IT AFTER MANY DAYS."

No matter how widely thrift is practiced, no matter how much the world advances in its recognition of that cardinal virtue, there will always be unfortunate beings who, through no fault of their own, need assistance.

The poor, the sick and crippled, the orphan, "Ye will always have with you." Though they may be of no value to the world at the moment, kindly assistance may salvage them and make them useful citizens. We cannot afford to waste the potential man and woman power represented by these unfortunate classes of society. Well directed charity is thrift, it is conservation of that immense power.

That is why one day of Thrift Week has been set aside as "Share With Others Day." Those who are fortunate enough to be self-sustaining must think of all the world as part of their own family, and feel it a duty to assist others who are in need. But charity should not only be an obligation, it should be a pleasure. Every one can manage his resources so thriftily that there will be ample margin to share with others—so that he can cheerfully give.

Let this last day of Thrift Week find you resolving to practice thrift in its broadest, highest sense—Saving Humanity.
