

There are very few bridge players in the world who are not so fortunate as to belong to bridge clubs. "Fortunate" is used advisedly, for bridge, like golf, takes people out of themselves. Many a woman has postponed or even forgotten her nervous break down in the anticipation of an evening out and a chance to eat party food. Many a man has taken a new lease on life after holding five honors or a hundred aces. Bridge clubs may be classified as men's women's and mixed. The mixed bridge club will be chosen for discussion as combining the characteristics of the other two. Of mixed bridge club there are two kinds, those that eat first and play afterward and those that play first and eat afterward. In the first, refreshment takes the place of an ordinary dinner and the hostess must devise some food scheme that will look like a party and yet be as filling as beefsteak and potatoes. Otherwise the men members are likely to be disagreeable. In the second, refreshment is one more meal than no one needs and must therefore be tempting as well as reasonably digestible.

Otherwise all the members will think dark thoughts next morning as they take their soda and water. Another problem is seating the players in such a way that no husbands and wives are at the same table, that three good-natured people are found to play with the dub and three hard-boiled people are found to play with the star. Guests help to solve the last two points. They may be bored or insulted without permanent hurt to the club.

Another initial problem is arranging things to suit members who play for money and those who don't. Luckily a compromise may be reached by playing for so much a corner. This is a sop to those who like something up on the game, while the higher moral courts have conveniently ruled that playing for so much a corner is no more than playing for a prize, which, of course, isn't gambling. Other problems arise about the third meeting. They are what refreshments to serve that haven't been served already, what frocks to wear that haven't been w who will volunteer to entertain a second aiready, time to fill out the season and who will take couple home who haven't an automobile. Bridge clubs are worth while, even if they o go to prove that man is a social animal. You n place the accent where you prefer.

BY JOHN MABIN Caretakes at Crater Lake

day, December 1, 1920 There was some kind of an ani nal around my house last night. His tracks were malted out so could not tell just what they were. By the tracks he made he was looking for something to est or a place to sleep.

Lodge

I was aut to the snaw pale to night, and took a short stroll up through the trees. By the looks of the spurs of the hemlock cones the pipe squirrel is still gathering his winter food supply or saving by getting his daily rations from from the cones that are still on the trees. I am not sure, but thought I saw a chipmonk today, he was some distance from me and I went and examined the tracks, but the snow was so loose couldn't be sure.

In going through the timber there seemed to be something missing, for a long time I could not think what it was; there were the trees, the wind, snow and the squirrels. What else belonged. and wasn't there? The Birds! Not a cheep or a twitter, not flash of black or brown wings, but I think that they are in canyons and thick brush out of the wind and sleet and when the sun shines again they will come back to the higher ground. When it is cold in the vally the timber alive with birds of all kinds, and they fill a great corner of the picture of this land so void of life.

China and Peacemakers

China, if and when the Chinese nation become whole again, will probably celebrate the month December as we celebrate the Fourth of July. Ch is the fireworks factory of the world, anyway, for decades has rather tragically furnished the plosive power for our own celebrations in favor Liberty, while she herself was squirming beneath highly oppressive heel of this Western democra It must often have occurred to many thinking a starving Chinese firecracker makers that there wa good deal of hypocrasy going into the red pa with the powder.

Now China is free, however, freer at least t she has been for a century or two, since West power laid hands upon her. After two years of pea ful protesting and bearing the yoke which protes tions availed not to lighten, her dreamy populat fell under the control of a few war lords, who snee at the soft answer and the theory of brotherly lo and who brandished muskets instead.

Here lies the tragedy. The muskets brou home the bacon to China where the peacemak brought home only rebuffs. And, with a cyni comfort to the jingoists in this country and in Gr Britain, and in France, and in Germany, and in ot quarters of a world which has been making son thing of a stifled effort toword the rule of ri instead of might in international affairs, all concession to China was made almost at the sa time that Woodrow Wilson, the peacemaker, w being celebrated at idealistic banquet boards by hi minded and outimistic good souls.

It is very hard to sell an idea or a machine t won't work, and very easy to sell one that will. " musket idea worked in China when no other won Dr. Wellington Koo might talk his lungs out bef the idealistic gentlemen at the Washington arms of ference about decent freedom from China from We ern meddling; he got nothing but cold stares. let a few military war lords fire on a British s prowling up a Chinese river and China gets what wants-hurriedly, from Great Britain and the Wo ern powers.

It's going to take a lot more heavy work Geneva to counteract that turn of circumstan and a lot more dinners and speeches to convince the skeptical world of the supremacy of peace on earth and good will to men over gunpowder and plenty of it.
