Student Athletics

Among questions submitted to students by the president of a certain institution of learning was inquiry as to what part of the course had contributed most to their moral development.

A resume of the replies gave the investigators a real surprise, for it was found that a majority of the students had stated "athletics."

While several courses influenced the development of character are included in the curriculum of schools and colleges, it is of interest that students are most definitely influenced by the fact that good health and good morals are necessary if they are successful at athletics. This is reason a plenty why student athletics in our high and normal schools should be encouraged and supported by all good citizens.
