CRATER LAKE IN WINTER TIME

back to make the short jump. The clouds grew more threatening and it became almost dark in the thick timber. I gave the slip their heads and helped them along with an occasional shove with the ski pole. I nearly went in Dewe Creek where a drift in the road sloped steeply and over hung the creek bank again a fall saved me from a ducking. I finished crossing the drift on my hands and knees.

I reached the tongue of rock that separates the "Garden" from the main canyon of Anna Creek, and sounded for the crust again, this time it was on top. I made sure that it wasn't wind crust, for had it been it would have been worthless as a factor in determining the condition of the snow on the south way of the canyon.

I went down the tongue until I was directly above a clump of trees and took off down the slope. I made the bottom without any trouble and began looking for a way to cross the creek. I found a small pond under the bank that was four or five inches under water. Would it hold my weight? It did but the snow didn't. I came within an inch of having to empty the water out of my shoes.

Here was the south wall. Would the snow hold me? I started up just as the wind brought a few drops of rain. The first half of the wall was climbed without a hitch. I had to stop and rest and started on when the crust gave way and I went down to my arm pits in the snow. I had my skis tied to my wrist and they didn't get away, though they tried hard enough. I now used them for something solid to get out of the hole I found myself in. The rest of the way to the top was climbed in spread eagle fashion, for as soon as I tried to stand up I would break through the crust. When I reached the two big trees that marked my objective I sat and said to myself, "Have a Camel." I was on schedule with a few moments to spare. It began to rain before I finished the cigarette and I threw the burning ember over the rim of the wall and watched as the wind caught it and whirled it into the crazy dance of the firefly, in the darkness below.

I put on the boards and started down the rut covered road in the dark. If you have never had skis on in the dark and on rough snow, I cannot give you a better description of it than to say it is about ten times as bad as the deck of a small boat in a choppy sea. You never know just what to expect, and are never ready for what comes. It is one continuous fall, not quite to the snow, but a wild waving of arms and flourishing of ski pole. You recover your balance just in time to do it all over again.

The sound of the water of Pold Bridge Creek reminded me I was thirsty but it would take ten minutes to get down to the water and back to the road, so I went on without it. At the top of the hill I sounded the snow and found two feet, this meant the snow line would be somewhere near the south entrance and I had expected to be at the foot of Gold Spring Hill four and one half miles.

I sometimes wonder just what it is about the road that causes me to remember, or to know within a half mile, my position on the road the darkest night I ever traveled over it. The mile posts or signs are always in the right place, and every turn and tangent tells me of the next lettered board. When traveling is good the mile signs seem close together, but Sunday night some one seems to have moved them all down the road.

Between the four and three mile sign the rain caught up with me again about the time I decided to put on my coat it quit. The rain helped the traveling some. My skis were beginning to stick, but before I was out of the shower they were sliding nicely. (To Be Continued) Republicans of Jackson County Meet Saturday (Continued from Page 1) to posterity. "Keep alive the principles of liberty and justice," was the closing admonition.

Women's National Work - Mrs. Gordon McCracken of Ashland, whose subject assigned was "Women in Politics," spoke as the representative of the women of Jackson county, and as the state regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Mrs. McCracken, however, did not talk on women in politics, but devoted most of her short address to describing how the women of the nation have and are doing their part in developing and upholding America, during which she dilated on the great aims and accomplishments of the D. A. R. organization. She told of their having completely carried out their survey of projects in Oregon for the state's welfare, the last feature of which was the passage of the legislature just recently of a bill creating an Oregon song.

Mrs. McCracken spoke of the patriotism of the women of the United States during the World War and since. During that war she pointed out that eight million American women were earning their own living.

In closing she said the women of the United States have been and are exerting a great influence on their country for its welfare.

Washburn Creates Laughter - Speaking in his inimitable manner and making his first appearance at a Lincoln Day banquet here for several years, Col. R. G. Washburn of Portland told his listeners that while Lincoln was a great man - a man imbued with heroic courage at a critical time in the nation's history - other great men are living today unable to show their greatness without the test accorded Lincoln. He pointed out Calvin Coolidge as being a great leader, as a president who brought the nation out of the chaos which follows every great war. The speaker eulogized Coolidge at length, bringing out qualities similar to those of Lincoln.

Colonel Washburn, through his ready wit, kept his listeners in laughter and ready smiles as he told personal anecdotes which happened during his residence in Southern Oregon. He dwelt shortly on the changes that have taken place since his departure from his Table Rock home to the state metropolis, giving the Great War the credit. He missed familiar faces, and expressed joy at seeing old friends and claimed Rogue River valley as his "real home."

Guy Gordon, of Roseburg, district attorney of Douglas county, and Dr. E. B. Stewart of Roseburg past department commander of the American Legion, each gave short speeches, flavored with humor, lauded the masterful address given by Senator Butler.

Dick Posey, Southern Oregon's James Whitcomb Riley, was honored three times for recitations of his humorous poetry given in a captivating manner.

The last speaker on the program was Bruce Dennis, publisher of the Klamath Evening Herald, and preceded the singing of America by the audience. Mr. Dennis, while lauding Lincoln, also dwelt on state problems, attacking a recent legislative measure. His speech, however, did not meet proper approval by the listeners, Bert Anderson arising and interrupting to suggest the singing of the song.

The banquet hall was pleasingly decorated with flags and pictures of Presidents Abraham Lincoln, Calvin Coolidge and George Washington. Red, white and blue streamers also lent color to the scene.

While he did not give a speech E. V. Carter of Ashland was among those present. Mr. Carter has attended every banquet for 18 years with the exception of one.
