

The Baby Peggy of Japan

This substitution is Ashland's highest selected child actress—the girl, "Baby Peggy," after the American girl. Her story is the subject of a youthful entertainment in Japan.

GRANT OWN EXPLAINED

Starting up E street to Pioneer the day difficult. From the corner of Pioneer and E street the men moved up Pioneer toward Main street. At 10 o'clock Sunday night the oven was near Main street. It was left there until 2 o'clock Sunday morning, when the traffic was at practically a standstill, and the workmen moved it into Main street to the bakery. Moving in the bakery was re-enforced and the front of the building torn out in order that the equipment could be moved in.

Electicians completed the job of wiring the new oven Sunday. In order that it might be ready for use Monday.

Moving the oven was a gigantic task, but was completed without a single mishap. One of the smaller ovens, taken out of the Franklin bakery was taken to McCloud. In transferring this oven, Joe Richter, an employee of the White company, suffered a badly cracked finger, when the oven slipped. Another workman narrowly escaped injury.

Installation of the new oven in the Franklin bakery makes the equipment there complete and modern in every detail. Mr. Franklin is inviting the public to visit his bakery and inspect the equipment.

Ashland—An Educational Center

During the past few weeks we have been telling (and still continue to tell) of the various industries of Ashland—let, after all, where could one find more real industry than in the class rooms of Ashland, where students are at work earning their diplomas and their degrees?

The present home of the Southern Oregon Normal School, in addition to the city's excellent school system, makes it possible for Ashland to claim distinction as an educational center as well as the home of some very worth-while institutions.

Greetings and best wishes to the graduates of 1937!

Modern Youth Follows Type

"Nothing at all吸引着 youth, they are just the same as the youth of generations past have been, and the ideas which are born about the trend of youth is merely the repetition of an idea which has been constantly being repeated by youth," W. P. Walker, T. M. C. A. secretary, who filled the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church Sunday in the absence of the pastor, said.

The church was filled for both services and much interest was manifested by those who attended in the problem of modern youth.
