FARM NOTES

Hatching results obtained, in the 1927 season, by the poultry department of the Oregon Agricultural college at the experimental farm are as follows:

All of the chicks hatched were produced in the poultry department's main breeding experiment, to increase the profitable laying age of the hen to four or more years. To attain this rigid culling of the flock is practiced for egg record as well as hatchability and weight of the eggs, and the weight and broodiness of the fowl. All breeding hens whose eggs did not hatch 50 per cent of all eggs set during the season have been culled. The chicks that did hatch from these birds are also to be culled out because the department does not desire to continue blood of hens whose eggs will not give at least a 50 per cent hatch.

George Inlow, Ashland carpenter who was employed at the time of holdup as S. These figures do not in any sense constitute a record, says F. L. Knowlton, poultry husbandman at the college farm, but they are considered satisfactory for pedigree hatching.

J. Shelton, manager of Eugene Guard at time of holdup, was asked by defense if he or his paper had any mail on Train No. 13, October 11, 1933, but the judge objected to this question. He and Attorney Smith went outside to discuss the legality of the question and returned later, but the question not was not mentioned again.

FOR SALE— Light oak dining table and buffet, Georgie Coffee, Tidings office.

Every chick was individually pedigreed and many interesting family and individual characters were revealed. From a pen of barred rocks of two old hens and 13 of their 2-year-old daughters 232 eggs were incubated and 222 good chicks hatched, or 78.7 per cent. This result, Mr. Knowlton believes indicates that the two old hens, which showed good hatchability previously, have passed that character on to their daughters, as it was hoped they would.

PROSECUTION HAS DRAMATIC ENDING

Reddiford told of putting out posters and circulars to find the D'Autremonts. He said under cross examination that the defendant was in custody when he talked to him.

Reddiford became quite emphatic when under cross examination, defense attorneys referred to Alcatraz as a "Prison."

A. W. Demming accompanied Mrs. D'Autremont around San Francisco, her expenses were paid by the government, Reddiford admitted. Attorney Nuener objected to this line of cross examination. Demming is now on his way from Stuebenville, Ohio to Jacksonville, Reddiford testified.

Hugh's Travels

Andrew J. McKenna, San Francisco, chief clerk for the special agents of the Southern Pacific in his testimony told of Hugh's travels following the crime as he said Hugh related them to him.

He said Hugh told him he went to San Francisco, then to Los Angeles, where he worked with a contractor near Long Beach, then to Yuma, El Paso, Tacos, Fort Worth, Dallas, Little Rock and Emmett Arkansas, where he met Bill Adams, doubling back to Missouri, St. Louis and Chicago, then joined the army in California and went to the islands. McKenna said Hugh told him that several times he was kicked off trains, but by talking fast and appearing neat and telling them he was on his way to see a sick relative, they let him go.

McKenna said Hugh refused to talk about crime contending that it was an unfair question.

Under cross examination McKenna admitted that he quizzed the defendant for two hours, after which Hugh was taken to his cell very ill and had to have a doctor. He also admitted that Hugh said he would not plead guilty to a crime which he did not commit.

McKenna said that officers would quiz him every day he was in the Alcatraz prison.

E. Jefferson, post office inspector was next called and testified concerning the conversation which he alleged passed between Hugh and his mother in the Alcatraz prison.

"Mrs. D'Autremont said 'Well it will be hard for you to establish an alibi,'" he said.

"I have a weird, weird story to tell" Hugh said, according to the witness, and then added, "Mother, you didn't think your 19 year old boy would, so wrong, but I didn't mean to do it."

Hugh remarked to his mother concerning the excellent treatment he received at the prison.

Under cross examination Jefferson admitted that everything was arranged for the inspector to hear the conversation between mother and son before the mother arrived.

He said the mother talked to her son for about four and one-half hours.

"What else was said," he was asked.

"Something was said about the father, but I don't think it would be fair to mention it here," Jefferson said.

At this point Paul D'Autremont nudged Hugh.

"What did the mother say when she entered the room?"

"I couldn't hear what she said but Hugh answered 'No, No, a thousand times no, mother.'"

Attorney Collier, who was conducting the cross examination then attempted to confuse the witness by use of the statement, "It must be hard mother, to think that your 19 year old boy could go wrong, but Mother, I didn't mean to do it."

Jefferson admitted that Hugh was 23 at the time the alleged conversation took place.

Parker Called

Parker, the "John Doe" witness of the state whose sensational testimony climaxed the trial, was then called. He was very deaf.

Parker, an Englishman, said he lived on Elliott Creek, a tributary to the Applegate river, that he was a miner for nearly 60 years. His testimony was evidently used by the state to show the way the boy left the country after the crime.

He said he lived along, and that on October 12, 1933 he was visited by a young man carrying a gun who asked the trail leading to the Blue ledge summit. "I wasn't very willing to tell him so he pointed the gun at me and said, 'Move, move' the old man said. "He said he was from Donamore mountain, and I noticed that he was wet and asked him how he got so wet and he said he had been deer hunting. I told him he would have some climb to the top of the mountain and he said he didn't mind a little climb because he was anxious to get to camp up there."

His positive identification of the defendant followed, and the quiet words of Nuener, "The state rests your honor."
