Dam To Be Scene Of Real Old-Fashioned July Fourth

Arrangements for the Hyatt Dam July Fourth celebration are moving along merrily according to J. H. Fuller, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce who met Tuesday noon with directors of the organization in an informal meeting for discussing the affair.

There will be barbecued beef furnished by the folks of the Talent Irrigation District, ice cream and coffee furnished free to everyone.

Glen A. Arnsperger, manager of the Talent Irrigation District was in Ashland Monday evening and reported the folks in that territory all ready for the big time.

The program includes the placing of several boats on the lake for the use of those who enjoy that sport. There will be a flag raising. Amateur baseball games are planned. The celebration of Independence will be read and there will probably be an oration by some valley citizen.

RAPID CITY, S. U. Of O. Gives Statistics Of Weeding Process And Flunking

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene, June 27—Special—One hundred forty-nine students "flunked" out of the University of Oregon during the school year of 1926-27, it was revealed in figures announced today at the registrar's office. A weeding process of the first two terms of the year had so reduced the number of academic laggards that in the spring term just ended, the "flunkers" numbered less than half those of the fall term.

Spring term flunks numbered 30-25 men and 5 women. Seventeen men and one woman failed to make the five hours required for freshmen or seven hours required for members of the three upper classes. Five men and three women were dropped under the 17-hour rule imposed on probationers, and three men and one woman were flunked because of failure to meet special requirements imposed by the scholastic committee in their individual cases.

The year's figures show a decided advantage for women students. Of the 149 who flunked out, there were 124 men and 25 women. This ratio was approximated in each of the terms. Illustrating the drop in the number of flunks as the year progressed, the following figures are given:

Fall term, 65 flunks; winter term, 54; spring term, 30.

Federal Government Will Not Forget D'Autremonts In Pen

If in confessing, the D'Autremont brothers took thought of any prospect that a life sentence means less than its terms would imply, they and others so minded will do well to look into the law which still gives the federal government a supervisory hand. United States authorities are notoriously less lenient than are local agencies of justice and it may safely be predicted that the trio's first attempt to evade the full measure of their punishment, whenever and whenever made, will meet with stern protest from the quarter which most of all has been instrumental in their apprehension.

The agents of justice of the United States are in a position to do more than fan the air with futile words. Nothing that has thus far occurred has abated by an iota the responsibility of these murderers to federal law. The new code (section 452) expressly provides that—

Every murder perpetrated . . . in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate any arson, or robbery . . . is murder in the first degree.

In other words, the federal criminal statutes allow no latitude whatever to the slayer who kills in the commission of one of the offenses mentioned. There is nothing in the law to prevent the government of the United States from calling each and every D'Autremont to the bar of justice; nor can they escape by reason of any bargain which may have been made with the state of Oregon.

It has long been the rule, though only recently called to popular attention by certain judicial pronouncements arising out of the prohibition amendment, that a person may, by one and the same act, become subject to punishment by different authorities. One who assaults another, for example, within the precincts of a postoffice, may be fined or imprisoned for violation of a city ordinance, for violation of the state law against assault, and for violation of the federal statute with reference to the same subject. Nor is the point too finely drawn to apply to the D'Autremont case. The power of the United States lies here in the circumstance that it may, if it chooses, virtually compel the state of Oregon actually to imprison the murderers for the full term for which they were sentenced. Should the state, at any time, attempt to exercise the prerogative of pardon or parole, the federal government may press the charge of murder. Nor is the latter course barred by a statute of limitations. There is no such statute with reference to murder. Forty years hence, if the men are still living, it will still be possible to bring them to book, in a federal court, for the crimes they have just confessed.

It is an adequate weapon, sufficient for every purpose the law now seeks to attain. And the time may come when it will prove a serviceable one. It is proverbial that the federal government always remembers, while states not infrequently forget.—The Oregonian.

Citizens Vote!

We wish that tomorrow it could be said that majority of citizens has decided the various urgent issues that are before the voters of Oregon today. However, that is too much to hope for. Rather it will be only a majority of those who take the trouble to vote.

Let us endeavor in Ashland to make a good record at the polls today. If you have not yet voted, we urge that you go now to perform this civic duty.

This is the busiest age ever known. But it knows the wisdom of taking time for enjoyment.

Busy smokers of today select Camel as their favorite smoke

PRESENT-DAY people, the fastest workers of all time, claim their right to enjoyment. And they choose Camels for the utmost in smoking pleasure.

Camel is made to please and delight the modern, experienced smoker. It is rolled of the choicest tobaccos grown. It is matchlessly blended for mildness and fragrance in the smoking.

Let Camels demonstrate their goodness and you'll know why the smokers of today choose them over all other cigarettes. For that exalted sense of taste-satisfaction, no other smoke can compare with this one.
