to navigate. Can hardly see wing tips. Running into another one now."
Position uncertain
The message about the fog was the 12th which Byrd had flashed back to the hangar during the day. In only three, however, did he give the America's position. This was believed to mean that while he knew his approximate position in longitude, he was flying above the fog and could not identify landmarks.
The America entered Newfoundland at the southern tip near Garnish on Burin peninsula and proceeded on up the coast over Whitbourne and St. Johns, ac-ording to United Press correspondents in that territory.

Once out to sea Byrd planned to follow a "flatter" course to Ireland than that taken by Col. Chas. A. Lindbergh and Clarence Chamberlin. For the benefit of observations, he steered straight for Ireland instead of following the contour of the earth to the north. Fog and compass trouble interfered with the flight during the early hours, despite elaborate precaution against accidents.

When the fliers took off from Roosevelt field at 5:24 a. m., they knew they faced mirky weather. But the possibility of compass trouble had not occurred to them.
Suddenly at 9:48 a. m., when the big Fokker was roaring over the coast of Maine, Commander Byrd noticed a discrepancy between the compass in his cabin and the one before Bert Acosta in the pilot enclosure up front. Acosta's compass was off.

It was then that Byrd sent the radio message which for a time puzzled the little group waiting at the hangar on Roosevelt field. "Stand by," the message said, "while we pump gasoline. Extra gasoline tanks interfering with compass."

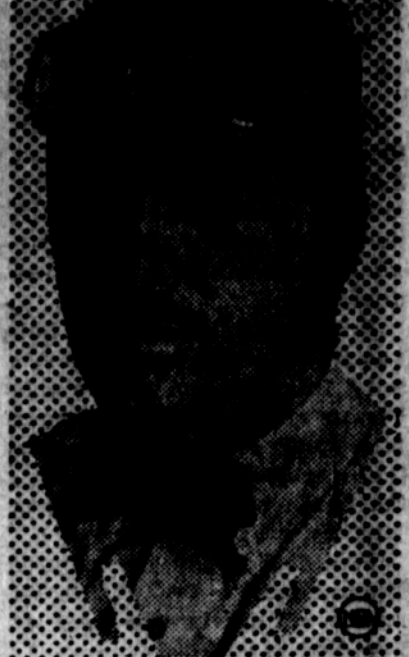

Made Observations
At one time Byrd messaged back that he was making important scientific observations, but that the fog remained dense near the earth. The plane was making better than 100 miles an hour.

Shortly before these signals had been repeated, Byrd was advised of the successful flight of Lieutenants Maitland and Hegenberger from San Francisco to Hawaii. He wireless back to his hangar directing aides there to wire the Pacific fliers his congratulations.
Byrd, with George Noville and Brent Balchen sat in the cabin of the big plane protected from the elements by glass windows. Acosta, the pilot, sat out in front at the controls. A telephone connects the crew in the cabin with the pilot.

They were equipped with every piece of equipment for safety and convenience that has been devised for modern flying. The cabin was so well protected that they found it unnecessary to wear regular flying uniform. Balchen took his place in the cabin in a business suit and leather vest.
Plenty to Eat
Where Lindbergh and Chamberlin and Levine flew to Europe in a few sandwiches, the crew of the America spared nothing in the way of rations. Their larder contained four roast chickens, chicken and cheese sandwiches, sweet chocolate, malted milk, hard tack, four quarts of coffee, five gallons of distilled water, tea, lemons, oranges and large quantities of pemmican, a condensed food. Six pounds of pemmican will nourish one man for

AGNES AYRES GETS DIVORCE
LOS ANGELES, June 29.—(UP) Agnes Ayres, once known as the "sweatheart of the screen," Friday tearfully related her real life romance and its brutal climax in Judge Summerfield's court.
When she had finished, the court granted a decree of divorce from S. Manuel Teacht, prominent Mexican, whom she married in an "ideal match" in Tijuana three years ago.
A special waterproof medicine kit contained everything from headache tablets to surgical scissors.

SAVE CALVES SAYS FOWLER

California Buyer Seeks to Purchase Valley Stock

"Save the calves" is the warning which County Agent R. G. Fowler is issuing to valley dairymen. Fowler says that a California stock buyer is in the valley at the present time looking for 1000 dairy cows. The fact that the Rogue River Valley cattle are T. B. free, and that prices in the valley here have not been top-notch, makes it easy work for the buyer, Fowler states.
"If these buyers went to the middle west for cows they would cost more than double what they pay here for like quality. It is rumored that California wants 50,000 dairy cows within the next year. There is a shortage of heifer staff in the United States and prices on dairy cattle promise to advance. Save your heifer calves" is the comment Fowler makes on the situation.

Home From California

Mr. and Mrs. Otto Winter have returned from Glendale, California, where they were called because of the death of their grandson, Longdon Winter Brown, 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard L. Brown.

Concerning the death of the boy a Glendale paper published the following:
"He was born in Glendale 13 and a half years ago and was popular as a boy in Glendale schools and in the Glendale Presbyterian church to which the family belongs."
"He shared his father's active interest in Christian Endeavor work and was a prominent personality among the young members attending a recent convention."

AIRMEN WILL NOT FLY ON RETURN TRIP

"We were confident of you on your remarkable flight," was the greeting sent by Hegenberger's parents. "Wonderful feat of navigation. God speed you in the service you love for unlimited success."

It was signed "Father, Family and Al." Al being the flier's brother.

"It's wonderful to hear from them so soon," responded Hegenberger, whose skillful navigating played such a large part in success of the flight. "I send my best love to them through the United Press."

"They're right; I love my service and I'm proud to be with Maitland in the accomplishment of this flight."

"I'm thankful to God for having protected you," was the message sent by Mrs. J. W. Maitland, of Burlingame, Cal.
"Tell them we are glad for their sakes we are here," was the word Maitland sent back. "There was no need to worry. We are in good health. Happy, too, for the sake of our parents, our wives and the army."

partnership and went into the dairy business on a small scale. There was not much to do, so during this time George would work out while Andrew stayed at home and kept things moving. His other two brothers worked out and his sister boarded with a neighbor. In 1867, Andrew went to school three months, which was the last school he went to. He and his brother then entered the dairy business on a larger scale. They also bought and sold young cattle, and prospered. But it was too good to last. In 1868 his brother got married and everything went well for about a year. The land they were on had proven to be grant land, it was taken by a mortgage, and offered for sale at $9 per acre, so they bought 150 acres. The dairy business was soon ended, the land around them was bought and fenced, and they had no range for their cows.
In 1873 Andrew sold the ranch and went to work for the man that bought it. He worked through threshing time in Salinas Valley, and around Watsonville, and in the fall took his first trip to San Francisco. While there, he met a book agent. Andrew asked him several questions about it, and the agent told him he could make good wages, so Andrew decided he would try it. He bought some books and began canvassing. But before long he found that he was not fitted for a book agent, he had always been on a ranch, and that was where
