Play at Jackson

The Daily Tidings wonders why the baseball leaders scheduled the second championship game between Ashland and Klamath Falls at the fairgrounds instead of at the Jackson Hot Springs grounds. The first game is at Klamath Falls tomorrow and the second in this county, with the third determined by the relative size of the gate receipts at the first two games, according to the announcement.

The attendance at the Jackson Hot Springs ground has been very steady at all games played there, according to information given us, whereas the attendance at other parks has been jumpy. Ashland prepared the baseball grounds last year and gave the Boas free use of it this summer; Ashland furnished the team their baseball suits and some other equipment, we were also told, and recently a fund was raised here to assist in financing the team.

It would seem to The Tidings that the attendance would probably be larger at Jackson Hot Springs, even though a few snitchers might remain parked on the nearby highway, hillsides and railroad tracks for the purpose of cheating the players out of the price of admission. Also, to play the game on the diamond near this city would be a deserved courtesy to the supporters of the team here, although all of the support of course has not come from Ashland. Medford, apparently is not very deeply interested in baseball any longer, as they ended with a deficit and their team became disorganized even before the regular schedule was finished.

Again, we say it would be so much better for the Boas and Klamath Falls to play at Jackson Hot Springs, instead of making local fans go to the fairgrounds to see the game.

Appreciation

During the last winter, The Daily Tidings was sent as a courtesy to the students who were away from Ashland attending the various colleges and schools.

Full appreciation of this thoughtfulness and of the value of The Daily Tidings as one of Ashland's assets is expressed in a letter which The Tidings has received from Romona, Wise, one of the students at Emanuel Nurses' Home, in part:

"I thoroughly enjoyed reading it and would like to take this opportunity to remark that The Tidings is one of Ashland's greatest assets.

"Nothing in our beautiful little city is more devoted to the recommendation of possessions.

Ashland as one of Oregon's choicest "Such loyalty on the part of the paper does not go unnoticed among the out-of-town students and Ashland should be proud of her daily newspaper."

The Daily Tidings has consistently boosted Ashland; has during its period of publication advocated that which it considered to be for the best interests of the city—and we do not hesitate to state that the results and accomplishments here, in many of which The Daily Tidings played a leading part, have been more than sufficient compensation, even though our intentions may have been misunderstood or opposed occasionally.

Conditions make it necessary for some of our younger citizens to leave Ashland; and during their college days, The Daily Tidings will continue its policy of sending them this newspaper regularly, in order that they may keep informed of what is doing at home so that they may remain attached to the city.

Wonder if the member of that Ohio school board which has decreed teachers shall wear skirts of a length to meet with their approval think they are dictators of fashion.

Clothes make the man. That is he wears nine pounds according to a survey. With Milady wearing 10 ounces however they seem rather negligible.

It is said that raising the speed limit to 40 miles an hour in California has not relieved the speed cops. They just travel a little faster now.

Trial marriages are of course much in fashion. That is the kind that in which the trial comes a couple of years after the ceremony.

The chances to hit and run seem to be better on the highway than in a ball game.

This And That

The Fords will be creating speed demons. Edsel announces that the new craft will make more than 65 miles an hour without discomfort to driver or passengers. Just a "mighty good little car" he says.

Sometimes folks do a lot of complaining because traffic officers warn about defective breaks. They should view such wrecks as the Chrysler which pitched 350 feet over an embankment on the Green Spring mountain Sunday. It might make them think.

Probably the price of Labor Day celebration fire water will go up since Coast guards got that million dollar cargo on the high seas.

Home Hints

If you want confectioner's sugar to taste like cooked icing add something hot to the sugar. This takes away the raw taste. The butter, cream, or water may be heated before they are added.

A container in which strongly flavored food has been cooked, such as fish or onions, may be cleaned quickly by allowing vinegar to boil in it for a few minutes.

If you have difficulty when cracking thin shelled nuts to get the kernels out whole, try pouring water over them and letting them stand for just a few minutes. Pour off the water and crack them. They will come out nice and whole.

Always save your baking powder cans because they are innumerable ways in which they can be used. Nut bread or brown bread makes much more attractive sand-lins. There need be no waste in preparing round sandwiches.

Baking powder cans are very nice for cutting biscuits and cookies. Very attractive shaped French pastries can be made by cutting the cake with the baking powder cans.

The taste which is so characteristic of mutton and so disliked by many people may be removed by roasting two or three apples in the pan with the mutton. The apples which take up this flavor may be discarded.

THE GREAT MAIL ROBBERY

(Copyright 1934 by FBO Pictures Corporation)

When the mail train was stopped by the robbers, the mail was taken out and the train was left to continue on its way. The robbers were seen to get into the mail car and to take out the mail. The train continued on its way, and the robbers were seen to get into the mail car and to take out the mail.

"We're going on a shopping trip," he declared, "and maybe it's better if some groceries from the cellar."

At mention of the word "cellar" Howard jumped to attention, on guard against trickery. Captain Davis smiled his thoughts.

"Come on down with me, then you'll be sure for yourself that it's all right," he urged.

He raised about three square feet of flooring at one corner of the cabin and pointed to the ladder that led into darkness. He made the first descent, holding Howard with his left hand to guide the latter's footsteps.

"Nothing unusual down here, is there?" he asked.

At that moment he switched on an electric light on the side of a beam, and in the same instant his whole attitude underwent a change. Gone was the subservient, worn-or-I wouldn't have let him know this, would I? But just as badly off as we are as far as the law is concerned, I reckon I'd better be going to make a really valuable member."

Howard was being introduced in the presence of profit with the gear that in any personal difference.

"We're you going to get your gold here?" he asked. "I don't suppose there's more than one shipment a month—one real shipment, I mean. You can't hold up every train in the hope of catching that one."

Captain Davis wished stylish. "That's what organization gets you," he stated. "We've got our man placed to get the dope on when one comes through. He's assistant to the division superintendent here."

Howard remembered him now, a curly, yellow haired chap, athletic looking with fasted cheeks who answered to the name of Donaldson.

Another week passed uneventfully before the first cloud of impending trouble presented itself.

There had been conferences with the military, the bankers, the ranchers and the railroad executives to apply every precaution for a repetition of the costly robbery. The government was doing everything in its power to bring the spasmodic outbreak of lawlessness to an end.

The first intention MacReady had that the line passing through Yellow Canyon ought to be a profitable field for bandit operations came in the form of a telegram that Phelps handed over to him.

He had such little of the division superintendent's salary; he had seen even less of Laura. The reaction following Howard's arrest and sensational escape had left a feeling of strained relations that it was impossible to overlook. Paradoxically Phelps' friendship had cooled because, he thought, MacReady showed too much sympathy toward Howard while Laura was distant because she believed he had withheld help that he might have offered the accused man.

Consequently when Phelps returned to the office he was merely dropped out of the line of MacReady's office without stopping for conversation.

"Mail Car No. 8 Tuesday will carry gold containing half million with extra marine guard," was the message.

Consequently MacReady received his instructions.

"You will be ready to relieve the marine guard No. 8 Tuesday at Yellow Canyon Junction traveling eastward as far as Fort Dennison. An extra assignment is for Chicago banks, upon every Wednesday to see that there is no interruption in safe delivery. We are also to have type films broadcasting all in train in case of emergency."

MacReady's attention was attracted by the last part of the order. The marine on duty that day now would be in the train the following morning. They would have to take detail duty at the station house. He and a deputy guard of twelve men would take the assignment.

It would mean a twenty-four hour detail all around but that, too, was all part of the game.
