

TORN BODY OF MAN FOUND IN NEW YORK

Freshly Manicured Nails Are Clue to Strange Murder

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—(AP)—Murder of a most gruesome sort which would baffle Sherlock Holmes was brought to the attention of police officials here tonight.

The headless body of a man, a piece believed to be a tongue and footprints made by the left-heeled shoe of a woman and others by men are among the clues found in a lonely gully in the Burroughs of Queens.

Detectives observed that the victim's fingernails shone with the polish of a recent manicure. With these facts to work on detectives sought Charles Patti, a restaurant owner who has been missing for a day or two and who caused some gossip among his neighbors by the meticulous care expended on his hands.

All efforts to find Patti have proved unavailing. He was estranged from his wife, who also was missing.

Police believe the murder was committed somewhere on Long Island and that the body was crammed into a burlap sack and transported to the Queen's ditch in an auto.

I HAVE PUT MY DREAMS AWAY

I have put my dreams away— Tucked them up in a silk e n shroud

Here's the little yearning dream That I hoped would make me proud—

This one I promised wealth untold This one (I was younger then) Gaily promised happiness—

I shall never dream again. I have put my dreams away—

Was it wiser, after all, That I shut them from my heart, Even though each one must fall?

Every dream was dear to me— Shall I send them from me, then? Would it not be best to keep them?

Keep them and go dream again. Ina Newberry

Important Books Reviewed—

It isn't often that the American book reading public comes across such a story as that told by Alfred Aloysius Horn and set down in the highly successful book, "Trader Horn."

From his location in South Africa Horn—this Robinson Crusoe of the twentieth century insofar as his semi-isolation from western civilization is concerned, discusses Americans, the theatre, animal hunts, the author of Shakespeare's works, liquor and most every other subject that is controversial or generally interesting. And when one considers that "Trader Horn" really lived, drew pictures as a means of paying for his meals, was as successful with his peddling business as the famed "Yankee Peddler" of the United States, an additional interest in the book may be noted.

Rambling, repeating, misspelling much of the time, the old trader of South Africa carries on in such fashion that the American book reading public in short order takes a liking to him and purchases in less than two months 22,000 copies of his book. Here are a few of the things he observes regarding the world today, only a few of the things chosen at random and not designed to take from the reader the pleasure of a perusal of "Trader Horn."

"The Americans must have novelties, whether in search of one of these breakfast foods or in literary matters. I'm not saying it's good for them. Bacon for breakfast and Shakespeare for reading 've been good enough for Lanchester and England generally speaking for a number of generations."

"What's that m'am. Do I believe Shakespeare was written by Bacon? That's one of the most foolhardy notions the mind of man could conceive. It's well known that the monks wrote Shakespeare. Our astronomy professor always said to me: 'Aloysius, my boy, your Shakespeare will carry you wherever you want to go. And remember 'twas not one head but many that represent Shakespeare. 'Twas the priests, who else? What human man could have learnt so much without the Confessional?'"

Then, for a sketch of life in the far-away countries, a suggestion of the life of Crusoe: "Thus for dinner we had fish, flesh and fowl. It was about sunset when we arrived at the old slave town of Angola. Some of the tricks of the natives were wonderful. An arrow was fired at one of the native's heads. The missile went in piercing the left cheek and protruded from the right."

John Galeworthy, in an introduction to "Trader Horn" guarantees the authenticity of the book. And with this added assurance readers in the United States and England, where it also is having a large sale, probably will keep it on their tables to be read and reread by every member of the family for many years.

HEDDA HOYT TELLS About Shedding Tiers

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—(AP)—At the present writing there are no signs of our shedding tiers; Tiers will be just as popular during the fall and winter months as they have been during the summer season.

Not only frocks but wraps are being stressed with front tier arrangements. Even fur coats in some cases have tiers carried out in contrasting furs. A gray caracul coat, for instance, has a deep tier of gray-furred ermine. Another coat of black seal has two diagonal tiers of gray squirrel. Sleeves of this model are made entirely of squirrel.

Many of the latest evening gowns of pastel velvet have no trimming except diagonal tiers at the front of the skirt. One new frock has the tiered effect without resorting to set-on tiers. In this case the straight-lined gown is made of three materials in three graduating colors giving a tiered effect. The upper part of the bodice is made of pale flesh georgette. Joining this, just above the normal waistline is a layer of pink satin which extends below the hem. The gowns' hems are slightly at a low neckline being held by a narrow belt of beaded pearls.

Triple tier skirts are frequently seen among new fall models. The three tiers may overlap one another or may be spaced to show the foundation between tiers. A bit newer, however, are the diagonal skirt tiers which are usually posed at the front of the skirt only. Diagonal lines of all sorts are well liked at present and are preferred to horizontal trimming details.

Have Meeting

A pre-school group of Parent-Teacher workers met at the home of Mrs. Glenn Fabrik on Tuesday afternoon, August 29, which time an outline for the coming year.

The most important meeting brought before the meeting was the election of state officers which will be held during the state convention, which convenes at La Granda in October.

During the afternoon, Mrs. Louis Dodge, of Ashland, vice-president, was prevailed upon to allow her name to be placed upon the ballot for president. Not alone from the standpoint of precedence, do we consider Mrs. Dodge to be the logical future president but from that of efficiency and long service. For the past six years she has been an active member of the executive board, first as a district president and for four years as first vice-president.

The Parent Teacher workers of southern Oregon are proud of the privilege to endorse and work for as capable a candidate as Mrs. Dodge.—Medford Mail Tribune.
