CLASS OF 1920 FINISHES COURSE

The closing scene of high school drama was enacted last evening, when the 54 members of the senior class of 1920 made their initial bow to the world as finished products of the city high school. The exercises attending the finishing of the class's course in high school were held in the Chautauqua building, and were witnessed by a large audience of friends and neighbors, who came laden with flowers and congratulations for the young people, who have so successfully finished this most important milestone in their life's journey.

No decorations on the stage were needed to add any attractions to the charming effect of the presence of the boys and girls appearing before the audience. Only the figures, 1920, outlined in the class colors were suspended over the front of the stage, while above the footlights were banked masses of bouquets from the friends of the class, giving the needed touch of color to the stage fittings.

To the strains of the march from "Aida" by the high school orchestra the class made their appearance and took their chairs on the stage. Thirty-two girls and twenty-eight boys finished the high school course this year, and are as follows:

After an invocation by Rev. W. E. Bean, the high school glee club rendered two charming vocal selections, "Spinning Chorus," and "Voice of the Western Wind." This was followed by the class prophecy read by Lewis Beeson, in which he related sketches of the future career of the members of the class of 1920, as seen by the eyes of an old seer who peered through the mists of the future and revealed them at the present time.

The speaker of the evening was H. V. Poling of the Oregon Agricultural college, who addressed the graduating class and audience on the subject, "The Grip That Holds." The speaker opened his address with a personal experience in which he related the story of a young man slipping on the edge of a precipice while climbing Mount Hood, who saved his life by gripping a shrub as he was slipping into a crevasse in the rocks. He then enumerated the many grips that confront a person in life, in which appeared the grip of tradition, the grip of faith and the grip of the heart. These he illustrated with topical instances as applied to the lives of the youth before him.

The issuing of the diplomas to the 54 members of the graduating class was conducted by Superintendent G. A. Briscoe of the city schools, and after a benediction by Rev. Bean and a selection, "The
