To return to Ashland after an absence of seventeen years, and to find the city so advanced and improved that scarcely a familiar landmark shows, is the experience of Perry McDaniel of Cedarville, who arrived here yesterday with his wife, while on his way to visit in Grants Pass. Many people have an idea that the tourist trade is of little benefit directly to Ashland, but according to a statement made by one of the local automobile dealers their trade adds appreciably to the income of the stores and business houses. Only last Saturday Mrs. Anna R. Kingbury, a tourist here from Redlands, Calif., made a purchase of $138.60 in tires at a local garage, and Monday another tourist made a purchase of $118 in tires. This is only one instance of the money that is left in Ashland by tourists, and as it is always strictly cash, their trade throughout the summer amounts to no inconsiderable amount.
