THURSDAY'S NEWS

A Joyous Celebration.

To emphasize the fact that Charles Ramsey of Scenic Drive was born just 88 years ago Tuesday, there was a sort of family reunion, including George Ramsey, a resident of Omaha, Neb., at Prof. Gilmore's home, 283 Scenic Drive, the guests being within a stone's throw of one another and constituting a community in which kind acts and sympathetic friendship has always prevailed. Mr. Ramsey, Sr., although not an Italian, but very much a loyal and law-abiding American, has for many years lived at Italy, Texas, and claims it as his home. The invited guests included C. C. Weisenberger, Tom Hudson, Charles Ramsey, George Ramsey and J. P. Halfhill, with Mrs. Gilmore, Miss Ramsey and Mrs. Halfhill as the accredited cooks, tableware manipulators, waitresses and clarifiers of culinary utensils, and it is but truth to say that they proved themselves to be skillful operators at a wage by no means excessive. At a splendid dinner served at 6 o'clock, replete with many good things, a cake with candles that marked 88 in red, white and blue colors, made its appearance and told the story of the occasion of the gathering. With plenty of good music, exciting story telling and an independent sizing up of our country's needs, the stag party, for such it was, took their departure for their several homes, glad to meet, sorry to part and ready to meet again. The house decorations consisting of Oregon grape and the bright red merries of mountain ash, were very effective.

Mrs. H. K. Tomlinson was elected president and Mrs. O. A. Paulserud vice president at the meeting of the Lady Elks' Card club yesterday afternoon in the Elks temple. CHRISTMAS SEALS SOON TO BE ON SALE

The Oregon Tuberculosis association, under the direction of the executive secretary, Mrs. Saidie Orr-Dunbar, is organizing its forces throughout the state for the annual sale of Christmas seals. Robert W. Osborn, who has just conducted a tuberculosis survey of eastern Oregon, has been named seal director and is already in the field building up an organization for what the association hopes will be the biggest and most successful sale yet held in the state.

The Public Health associations will conduct the sale in the 11 counties where they exist. They are Jackson, Coos, Lane, Washington, Claskamas, Hood River, Union, Harney, Curry, Multnomah. In other counties other organizations have already signified their intention of taking an active part in the sale of the seals. In Yamhill county, club women will conduct the sale in McMinnville, Newberg, Sheridan, Amity, Willimina, Dayton, Carlton and Dundee.

The budget of the Oregon Tuberculosis association for use in 1921 is $35,000 and through the sale of the Christmas seals at a cent apiece, this sum will be sought. This means a sale of five seals per capita if the work of the association is to be continued along its established lines. If a sum less than this is raised, it will mean the sacrificing of some part of the vital educational, demonstration and experimental work.

HOW DOUGLAS FIR RESTOCKS ITSELF

In spite of forest fires, nature has restocked a good per cent of the logged and burned-over forest land in western Oregon and Washington, according to J. V. Hoffman, director of the Wind River Forest experiment station, who has just returned to the station ner Carson, Washington, after an inspection trip that took him over many of the larger logging operations in western Washington. For several years the forest service, under Dr. Hoffman's direction, has given much attention to the study of natural Douglas fir reforestation in the northwest. He has found that most of the young fir growth coming in on burned-over areas is not due to seeding up by occasional trees spared by the fires, but rather from seed buried in the duff of the forest floor.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions, presented by the committee at the Friday session of the Jackson county institure, were unanimously adopted:

Whereas; It is the sense of this meeting of the Jackson County Teachers' Institute that the present salary of the Superintendent of Public Instruction of Oregon is entirely too low and not commensurate with the duties and responsibilities of that office.

We therefore urge that at the next regular session of the state legislature it be raised to $5000 per year.

We further believe that the present salaries of the county school superintendents of the State of Oregon are in all cases too low to attract and hold competent men and women in those positions—and, as a result, the elementary schools of the state are suffering.

We therefore further recommend and urges that an adequate salary schedule be arranged and adopted that will include every county in the state and will take due cognizance of all elements and factors that ought to be considered in planning such a schedule. These elements or factors we believe to be: (1) Total school population; (2) area of the county; (3) assessed valuation. We believe that the minimum salary for any county school superintendent in the state should be $2000 per year.

Be it resolved that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the secretary-treasurer of the Oregon State Teachers' association and a copy to each member of the state legislature from Jackson county,

Signed: E. H. Hedrick, chairman, Geo. A. Briscoe, Mrs. Harriet Minthorne, Mrs. Blanch Canode, G. W. Milam.

JURY FINDS S. P. BRAKEMAN GUILTY HOLDUP

At the circuit court in Jacksonville yesterday a jury returned a verdict of guilty in the case of David H. Bearks, a Southern Pacific brakeman, who was tried for complicity in a holdup on a freight train in the Siskiyous two months ago. The jury was out 19 hours before they reached an agreement.

Accused with Bearks in the same crime are D. H. McGlown and Clarence E. McDade, who have admitted their part in the hold up, but claim that the gun was held by a mysterious "John Doe" who wore a mask during the affair, and disappeared completely afterwards. McDade made a signed statement telling of his part, which was introduced in the trial of Bearks. It accused the defendant of having plotted the holdup with him. The court in instructing the jury, told them not to consider this statement.

Bearks, the convicted man is known in the pugilistic world as Kid West and claims to have battled Wild Bill Reed to a draw and a victory in the southwest part of the country.

OFFICIAL CENSOR MUST EXERCISE POWER OF PUTTING BAN ON SCENES.

LONDON, Nov. 13—A new group of artists is forming in London. They call themselves the "Tubists."

A picture painted for advertising purposes by Mr. C. R. W. Nevinson, the famous artist, failed to pass the Underground Railways' official censor, who is responsible for all those advertising posters which bedeck the platforms and carriages. The censor's job is to see that the advertising designs shall give no nasty shocks to the moral system of all those provincial grannies and country cousins who have occasion to travel on the subways.

Nevinson's picture was intended to advertise a new play which was recently produced by Miss Viola Tree, entitled "The Unknown." This play deals with postwar religious controversy and the poster advertisement depicted a crucifixion—but the figure on the cross, though somewhat vague and undefined, was undoubtedly that of a nude woman.

"No," said the Underground Railways' official censor, "this cannot be!" and Nevinson's picture was banned from London's "tubes," as the subways here are called.

Such a wealth of coloring and so much good tast eis exercised in keeping the "tubes" decorative, that the platforms and passages have become known as "the people's favorite picture gallery."

Hence the "Tubists," who in their new school are vying with each other to succeed in satisfying the censor and to "remain artistic nevertheless."

NATION ENTIRELY FREE OF STRIKES AND ECONOMIC SOCIAL UNREST.

By HENRY WOOD
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

PARIS, Nov. 12.—Within 2 years after the signing of the armistice, France has worked two vertitable miracles—one of re-adjustment and one of reconstruction.

As a result of this miracle of re-adjustment although France was the one allied country that suffered most from the war, and the one country in which the increase in the cost of living was the greatest, she is the only one of the big Allied powers, who today is entirely free of any strikes or social unrest of an economic nature.

Furthermore, she is the only one of the big Allied powers who in the same period of time has been able to free herself fully and definitely from the menace of Bolshevism. The death knell of the latter was sounded a month ago when in national convention at Orleans the French Federation of Labor almost unanimously condemned the leaders who up until eight months ago ordered and supported political strikes amongst the French workingmen.

Instead of waiting, as much of the rest of the world has done, for economic life to re-establish itself on the pre-war basis, France saw at once that this would never happen and immediately readjusted herself to the new economic life imposed by the war.

The official statistics of the Allied countries place the increase in the cost of living in France as a result of the war at 300 per cent.

Yet, despite this astounding handicap, official figures of the French Ministry of Public Instruction, show that salaries generally throughout France have now been increased from 200 to 300 per cent.

It is this quick readjustment of the whole economic basis of French life to the new standard of living created by the war, that has left France entirely free from industrial strikes for the past nine months and has wiped out completely the menace of Bolshevism.

All France is hard at work today on a fairly contented basis to repair the havoc and damage wrought by the war.

Like all other Allied nations in Europe, one of the greatest damages to France from the war was the increase in her importations and the decrease in her exportations resulting in the frightful decrease in the value of French money in foreign countries.

Yet the most astounding progress is being made to remedy this by increase in French production and consequently increased exportation and decreased importation.

"MARJORIE" TELLS HOW YOU MAY BE STYLISH AND STILL HAVE HIPS.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—Fifth Avenue's showing of real mid-winter dresses is playing some tricks on the straight-line chemise dress. A glimpse at the windows all bedecked with rich gowns for hurly-burly winter weather gives a strong hint that by springtide the dresses will be fuller and a wee bouffant.

It is the uptown houses which exploit "original models and imported creations" that are ringing the knell of the "string bean dress." They are following the examples of Paris which has swung away from the straight-line dress for so long that it is about ready to swing back to it. America's swerve from a universally becoming type of dress will be more gradual, however. The couturiers are using all their cleverness to merely fleck the gowns with some phase of the new trend.

Thus, one of the leading gown houses of America is showing a collection of rich duvetyns and velvets whose main deviation from the lines of the chemise dress is found in the irregular hem line which curves upward at the front of the gown. The hem continues into a wide contrasting facing. Thus, a model of cochin brown velvet continues its up-and-down hem line into a wide banding of marigold colored brocaded satin. This upward sweeping front line is found in many of the late winter models and gives promise of a directoire or Empire line before long, as a high waistline seems to blend best with this mounting hem.

Other houses, are sponsoring a new silhouette by inserting umbrella folds at the sides. Rich metallic brocades or satins are combined in this way with the main fabric of velvet, duvetyn, or a heavy wool velour. This exploitation of the hips is very contrary to the prevailing straight-line mode. Other hints of a coming season's bouffantness are given by horizontal pin tucks at the hips or fan shaped pleatings of contrasting, lighter weight fabrics.

Panels at the sides are also being used. This fad is especially noted in black-and-white costumes. One house is showing an importation of wide wale white serge or twill banded and paneled in black satin. Small pearl buttons outline the bandings and hip panels. Panels, by the way, are very chic when used as overtunics. Another importing house is showing a street gown of midnight blue serge and black satin. The satin is used as a rather clinging underslip and the serge is the tunic. It is about knee-length and is cut into deep points of uneven length. Some of the points are edged with tiny silk tasels that flop about most piquantly.

Midwinter frocks, however, are not forsaking all the fashion decrees of the earlier fall season. They are more chary of the tinsel and embroidery that frosted the gowns of yestermonth, but they are exploiting the craze for insets of contrasting color and material.

That naive little pastime which a papular song epitomized some time ago, known as "looking through the knothole in father's woden leg" had no view at all compared with that of the flip little rosettes, dabs of beads, and other gewgaws that are poked through a slash or eyelet in tr the bodice or skirt of a gown or the front of a blouse.

One house is showing a new model of seal colored duvetyn. If one had seen the fabric "in the piece," it would surely have been called damaged goods, for it is erratically covered with oddly shaped holes and slashes. As made, however, the openings come at the top of the skirt, over the shoulders, and at the middle-front of the bodice. These apertures are filled in with almond colored chamois skin.

Other dresses are full of large eyelets embroidered in colored silk and filled in with tiny dabs of gay ribbon or even tufts of fur. One house is showing a gown of black velvet promiscuously slashed. The slashes are underlaid by ermine paillettes.

The Ford 1-ton Truck

WILL HELP ABOLISH THE AFTER SUPPER, AFTER DARK BURDENSOME CHORES.

1. It eliminates several hours per day of unpleasant, non-productive labor; such as cleaning, feeding, watering, harnessing and bedding horses.
2. It saves time because it does more work in a given time.
3. It saves money for the above reason, and also because it only eats when it works.
4. The investment is less. Its upkeep is less. It requires less stable room. It releases the produce which horses consume from many valuable acres to the market.
5. Because of the time saved the farmer's crop is marketed earlier, thus enabling the Truck farmer to forestall the congestion which later occurs in elevator and railroad facilities.
6. The driver is more comfortable in any weather; warmer in winter and cooler in summer.
7. Time saved means a better cultivated farm. Better cultivation means better crops. There is less stock to feed in the winter—thus facilitating vacations.

In some countries the plow is stoll made of wood and pulled by human brawn. Others still use oxen, which is an improvement. Other still use the horse. Others use TRUCKS, which are superior to all.
