Hillah Nobles Are Sight to See They Wield a Wicked Snickersnee Wear Gorgeous Suit; My How Cute

(By Dorothy Bennett in San Francisco Examiner.)

The Hillah Temple from Ashland, Oregon, which is the first to come to San Francisco, was stopping traffic in front of the Alexander hotel, because they were wearing the most gorgeous uniforms that ever gave my eyes a treat.

They all had red fezzeas and yellow velvet jackets, and bright red trousers and white leggings, and medals pinned on the yellow velvet, and—my goodness, real swords, that looked awfully long and dangerous.

"I wonder what they're carrying round swords for?" I thought, standing next to a stately Shriner in all his glory. "They look pretty, but—"

Then the stately Shriner suddenly yelled out a greeting to a friend of his, who'd just come out and was posing for his picture, and the friend drew his long sword and waved it fiercely.

"Don't carve him," I said pleadingly, "remember, you're the first Temple that's come to San Francisco and you're supposed to meet and greet all the others as they come in. And if there isn't anything left after you've finished fighting, how'll you greet the rest?"

This touched the fierce Shriner and he looked thoughtfully at his sword and then put it away, while he told us all that he'd have mercy this time. The Shriner ladies, with their white fez hats, all heaved a sigh of relief, and then another howl went up.

"Gee, does somebody else need a referee, too?" I said, and Mrs. Rickert, one of the Shrine ladies, said no, they'd just caught sight of a honeymoon couple from their old home town, and were saying hello to them.

Every minute some automobile draped in red, yellow and green, dashed past, and Hillah Temple would yell at the driver most friendly and loud, and the driver would grin and wave his hand at us. And

With D. V. B. S. Forces

Miss Pauline Plummer has joined the D. V. B. S. forces, and is rendering good service this week.

the passersby would look and look at the beautiful uniforms and swords of Hillah Temple, which was posing for pictures and inviting everybody to come and pose with them.

The oldest Shriner, Mr. Wolsenburger, who carries the banner in parades and such, was in one picture with the rest of the patrol, and Captain Chapman, when the youngest Shriner slid in, with his eyes big and round, scared that they'd shoo him away, he being about ten years old, and not a Shriner yet, but only having ambitions that way.

The Shrine women, standing on the side lines and encouraging their husbands in this great ordeal, were scared they'd shoo him away, too, but they didn't. They let him take hold of their swords, and showed him the badges and pins on their velvet jackets, 'til he was dizzy with joy, and his eyes got bigger and rounder, and he couldn't say a word.

Then the corner "cop" strolled by, getting an eyeful of their costumes, and they must have thought he was a long-lost friend from the way they surrounded him. You'd have thought he was a whole police department including the patrol wagon, out for a parade, they were so nice, and the "cop" blushed and walked on, smiling very wide and carefree.

"We're going to welcome all the other temples," said Captain Chapman, "because we're the first one to get here."

"Yes," I said, tearing my thoughts away from the diamond decoration on his jacket and thinking that the practice welcome they gave the "cop" showed perfect form.

"Yes," he said, gathering his patrol up for another picture.

"Wait till you see them in the parade," said Mrs. Rickert, proudly. "They've been practicing for this for a whole year, drilling and all."

"I can hardly wait," I said, watching them all lined up, so handsome and bright-colored.

LARGE SIGN CAUSES MUCH COMMENT ABOUT THE CITY

A large sign has been erected two miles east of the city on the hillside just west of the Owen or Parker ranch, and at one side of the Pacific highway, advertising Tacoma, Wash. and vicinity.

The sign is about 50 feet long by 15 feet high and has printed in large letters the following information: "You will find good roads in the Puget Sound country," and "Tacoma the gateway to Mt. Rainier." No further wording is on the sign, but at one end is painted a picture of what the Puget Sound country is supposed to look like.

Many citizens have commented on the sign being placed this far from Tacoma, and various views as to whether it would be of any special benefit to that section of the country have been heard. But the people of that section should reap a rich harvest if the signs are scattered all over the surrounding country, to let the tourist know what they have for him around Puget Sound.

TOURISTS STOP IN ASHLAND TO VISIT WITH FRIEND

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Decking, of Charleston, S. C., and Mr. and Mrs. Rise, of Tacoma, Wash., who have been spending the winter in Petaluma, Calif., arrived in Ashland a few days ago for a short visit with Job R. Tozer, whom they met at Petaluma.

Mr. and Mrs. Rice were on the way to their home in Tacoma, and the Deckings were out to see the country, and were traveling with them.

After having seen some of Ashland and the surrounding country, Mr. Decking expressed the opinion, that if he lived in a place as pretty as Ashland, he would certainly never go to Petaluma to spend the winter.

Mr. Crimmins is district salesman for the cushion brake rod attachment for automobiles and trucks, over southern Oregon and will give demonstrations in Ashland this week.

WILL BATTLE FOR CHAMPIONSHIP HERE FORD DAY

MIDDLE-WEIGHT WORLD CHAMPION WRESTLER TO MEET RALPH HANDS

Match Was Signed Yesterday While Miller Was On His Way South—Regarded as Biggest Wrestling Event Ever Staged in State.

One of the best attractions for the big celebration here on the 3d and 4th of July was secured yesterday, when Walter Miller, of Los Angeles, the holder of the world's middle-weight wrestling championship, was signed up for a match here on the night of July 3d, with Ralph Hands, of Gold Hill, who is a dangerous contender for the crown held by Miller.

The latter was on his way south to engage in a contest in his home city, when he was met at the depot by Chairman Amos Nininger, of the Fourth of July committee, W. E. Pierson and L. M. Patton. Several local fans were also present when the match was signed up. Miller was accompanied by Martin Bowers, of Gold Hill, and the latter was enthusiastic over the prospects of the match, which will be one of the most important wrestling events ever held in the state, and the equal of which has certainly never been seen in southern Oregon.

The signing up of Hand is assured as he is only too anxious to get a crack at the championship and would be glad to meet the title-holder on almost any terms.

Here for the Summer

Miss Lillian Greer came in from Burbank, Calif., on train 14 this morning, and will spend the summer here with her parents.

PROSPECTS BRIGHT FOR WAR EAGLE QUICKSILVER MINE

Mining engineers are giving very favorable reports on the War Eagle mine, on Evans creek nine miles north of Gold Hill, one of the most productive quicksilver mines in the west. Many prominent county business men have subscribed stock and are taking an active part in its development. Prospects for the future of the War Eagle mine are bright and when the present program of the directors is carried out, this mine will be known throughout the country and will provide a material payroll increase for southern Oregon. Seventeen hundred feet of drifts, tunnels and stopes have already been constructed and work is being rushed on a greater tunnel system. A $40,000 furnace has been installed with a 35 ton per day capacity. Several cottages have been built in addition to the bunk house, cook house and other mine buildings. The holdings of the company amount to 520 acres of well timbered, well watered land. There is a seven year indicated supply of ore at the present time.
