Boys and Girls Of 15 Counties Plan Displays

SALEM, Or., Sept. 9.—(Special.)—Boys and girls of at least 15 counties will be competing exhibitors at the Oregon state fair, which opens its gates September 25, according to the announcement of J. E. Calavan, superintendent of the industrial club work department of the fair, who has just returned from a tour of most of the counties of the state. He reports that the youthful exhibitors are displaying unusual interest in preparing their exhibits, and the displays, when grouped together in the big educational building at the fair, will exceed any past exhibitions.

The competition will be between individual boys and girls and county teams composed of the two boys and two girls from each county entering who score highest in industrial club work in their own counties. Their transportation to Salem and return is paid by the various counties, and their expenses during the fair are met by a special appropriation of the fair board, which maintains a camp on the fair grounds for the children each year. Besides the prizes offered annually by the fair board there are a host of special prizes this year, offered by newspapers, business firms and other organizations of the state. These special prizes are principally in the form of expense-free trips to the summer school courses of Oregon Agricultural college.

With capable and responsible persons in charge the boys' and girls' camp is expected to be one of the principal attractions of the fair, this year, and fully 150 of the young exhibitors are expected to register.

Among the counties which have already signified their intentions of sending boys and girls teams to the fair are: Clackamas, Clatsop, Douglas, Hood River, Jackson, Linn, Malheur, Multnomah, Polk, Sherman, Tillamook and Washington.
