1925 FAIR BILL TO BE RETAINED ON NOV. BALLOT

ORAL OPINION BY JUDGE SUSTAINS FINDINGS OF THE LOWER COURT

DEFEAT IS FATE OF ALBRIGHT AMENDMENT

Voters Will Not Receive Interest Rate Measure This Fall; Exposition Hearing Regarded as Friendly Suit by Portland People.

SALEM, Or., Oct. 3.—The exposition measure initiated by the 1925 exposition committee will go on the November ballot, but the Albright interest rate amendment will not go before the voters this fall. The supreme court, in an oral order Monday morning, affirmed the action of the lower court in both of these injunction proceedings. A written opinion covering both cases, it was announced, will follow later. The oral order yesterday was given because that was the day upon which Secretary of State Koser must certify the November ballot copy to the various county clerks.

The exposition case was dismissed by Judge Kelly of the Marion county circuit court because of the refusal of plaintiffs to make their complaint more definite and certain, as demanded in a demurrer filed by the attorney general's department, and which was sustained by the court. In the complaint asking that Secretary of State Koser be restrained from placing this measure on the November ballot it was alleged that the county clerks had not checked the names on the initiative petition with their registration lists before certifying to the validity of the petition. The defendants insisted that the charges of irregularity must be made more specific, and this the plaintiffs refused to do.

This case is regarded here as merely a friendly suit to determine the validity of the initiative petition through a court opinion before proceeding with the campaign in its interests. The measure would permit the city of Portland to finance the 1925 exposition through a special tax.

ASHLAND IRON WORKS TURNS OUT BIG JOB

The Ashland Iron Works has just completed the largest blacksmith job ever done in southern Oregon. J. W. Opp, who operates the rock crusher at Jacksonville and furnishes gravel and rock to the South-orn Pacific in this section of the country, had one of the large shafts in the crusher sprung out of line until the machine would not operate. He was at a loss to know what to do about it. Calling at the Ashland Iron Works he was informed that they would endeavor to straighten the shaft, although they recognized the fact that it would be a difficult job, as the shaft was 10 feet long, eight inches in diameter at one end and tapered to the center, where it was 13 inches thick, then to the other end where it was 10 inches, with the bend in the center, where the shaft was of the greatest diameter.

The heating of the shaft required about four hours on a coke and coal fire on which two blowers were kept busy, one being a blacksmith blower and the other the blast furnace blower belonging to the works.

After the shaft, which weighed slightly more than 3000 pounds, had been heated through, it was raised by a derrick and allowed to drop, so as to bend it back into place. Three days were required to do the job. The work was made more difficult by the fact that the shaft was made of special alloy steel, which is harder by far to work with than ordinary steel.

Mr. Coder and R. M. Meadows had direct supervision of the job and are to be congratulated on being able to turn out a piece of work like this. All of the iron work of the American laundry, which burned at Medford some time ago, is being overhauled at the Ashland works.
