LIBRARY FRIGHT.
It Covers Its Victim With Confusion and Helplessness.

"That woman," said the library attendant, pointing to a woman who had just gone into the reading room, "had a pretty bad case of library fright."

"When?" asked the old subscriber.

"A few minutes ago, when she asked for a book," said the librarian. "Did you never hear of the library fright? Many people have it. It attacks them when they go into a strange library just to look around or rest for a few minutes and are informed that in order to enjoy the hospitality of the reading room they will have to ask for a book and make at least a pretense of reading. The chances are that, no matter how familiar they are with books, they won't be able to recall the name of a single one at that moment. If the library happens to be run on the help yourself principle, which gives patrons access to the shelves, they can pick up some volume at random, but when obliged to consult the catalogue, as they are here, their confusion is both pitiable and ludicrous."

"I had the library fright twice myself. My first attack was in the Congressional library in Washington. I wanted to read there for a few minutes, just for the sake of being able to say afterward that I had read there. Used as I was to handling books, I couldn't think of even the dictionary when it came to making a choice. After a few minutes of hopeless floundering 'Taine's History of English Literature' flashed across my mind. I had no desire on earth to look at 'Taine's History of English Literature' then or at any other time, but I give you my word I couldn't think of any other book to save my life.

"Another time, in a library here in town, I was stricken with a similar panic, and after stumbling through the catalogue in a dazed sort of way I asked for 'David Copperfield'—'Copperfield,' mind you, that I had read forty-seven times and knew by heart. It's a funny thing, this library fright. A person who has never experienced it cannot imagine how foolish and helpless the sufferer feels."—New York Times.

The Wise Goose.

You must not say "as silly as a goose" any more, for naturalists have been studying this animal of late years, and they have come to the conclusion that she is the wisest old bird going.

She never quarrels without cause; she sees danger before any other fowl; she has more courage than the rooster; she is far braver than the gobbler, and, if given a fair show, she can beat off the fox.

A flock of geese squatted around the barnyard at night is a much greater protection than the watchdog. They are light sleepers and will give the alarm the instant they see a stranger moving about.

So in future say "as wise as a goose" and give her all credit.—Montreal Standard.

Picture, Not Paint.

An art patron one day went into Turner's studio when the artist was already famous. He looked at a picture and asked what was the price. The artist named the sum he had set upon it.

"What," exclaimed the buyer, "all those golden sovereigns for so much paint?"

"Oh," replied Turner, "it's paint you are buying? I thought it was pictures. Here," producing a half used tube of color; "I'll let you have that cheap. Make your own terms." And, turning his back on the astonished patron, he went on painting.

Toasted Bread.

Bread that has been toasted until it becomes brown has had the starch in it largely converted into dextrin, and hence, so far as the brown portion is concerned, one of the processes of digestion is gone through before the bread is taken into the stomach. It will be found that the thinner the slices of bread and the more thoroughly they are toasted the easier digestion will be, and when all portions of the slice of bread are thoroughly toasted—not burned, but changed to a deep brown color—it will be found still more easily digested.—London Standard.

China's Great Wall.

The builder of the Great wall of China was a great warrior emperor called Chi Hwang Ti, who lived about two centuries before Christ. To put a stop to the incursions of the Tartars and other northern tribes he caused this great wall—1,800 miles in length—to be erected. It required ten years to build it, and in his haste to have it completed he worked to death tens of thousands of his laborers. Even when finished it proved useless as a means of defense.

Unenterprising.

A woman who visited the British museum at London recently inquired of an attendant: "Have you no skull of Cromwell?"

"How very odd!" she exclaimed. "They have a fine one in the museum at Oxford."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Too Much French.

He was out with his best girl, and as they strolled into the West End restaurant he tried to put on an I-do-this-every-evening kind of look. When they were seated at a table a waiter approached them.

"Will monsieur have a la carte or table d'hote?" he asked.

"Both," said the young man, "and put plenty of gravy on 'em."—London Tit-Bits.

OLD HOARDING PLACES.
Secret Drawers and Hidden Nooks in Which Money Was Stored.

It was the common opinion of writers on economics in the seventeenth century that much currency was hidden in ceilings, behind wainscots and in secret drawers. Hogarth in his print of "The Inheritance," forming one of the set of "The Rake's Progress," has depicted a shower of coins falling from the ceiling of the room where a workman had accidentally disturbed the molding. Old cabinets and secret drawers of any size have usually one or two secret drawers or cupboards, often most ingeniously contrived. It is surprising how well these secret corners elude detection, even when their existence may be expected or inferred. Some years ago the wife of a Kentish laborer was breaking up an old chest of drawers when she discovered a secret compartment nearly filled with gold coins of the reigns of William III. and George II. The chest had been purchased for a few shillings about twenty years previously, and the fact that this little store of coins had not been discovered earlier was all the more strange, because in all probability the drawers had been several times repaired.

A curious list of hiding places for money is afforded by two old books of memoranda and receipts relating to the Fulham Pottery works in 1693 and 1698. There are 210 guineas in a wooden box in a hole under the fireplace in the garret. There are 460 more in two covered receptacles under the fireplace in the old laboratory. Behind the door of the little parlor there is a can containing some milled money. Two boxes full of money were placed in two holes of the great furnace, from which they were to be drawn by a long, crooked iron standing behind the kitchen door. In all ten or a dozen such hiding places are named, and the money was variously contained in boxes, bags, cans, pots and purses.

There can be little doubt that the practice of hoarding money and valuables in private houses gave great encouragement to crime. A glance through the pages of early volumes of the Annual Register, largely devoted to the chronicles of crime, reveals a number of apparently hastily planned robberies, which resulted in rich hauls out of all proportion to the occasion. Some thieves get in at the garret window of a house in Devonshire square and carry off from the owner's bedchamber an iron chest containing cash, notes and other valuables to the amount of £10,000. Two men enter the custom house at Limerick and in a few minutes carry off cash to the amount of about £1,800. Such is the character of the crimes which were then most successful—a bold, quick bid for the treasure chest, which was almost certain to be well stocked and very often convenient for removal by two or three thieves acting in concert.—W. A. Atkinson in Chambers' Journal.

FRIENDSHIP INSURANCE.

That there may be such a thing as carrying insurance too far is indicated by the case of Mr. Mulcahy and Mr. Mulhooly, two Irish gentlemen. Though they were known to be great friends, they were one day observed to pass each other in the street without a greeting.

"Why, Mulcahy," a friend asked in astonishment, "have you and Mulhooly quarreled?"

"That we have not!" said Mr. Mulcahy, with earnestness.

"There seemed to be a coolness between you when you passed just now."

"That's the insurance of our friendship."

"I don't understand."

"Why, thin, it's this way: Mulhooly and I are that devoted to wan another that we can't bear the idea of a quarrel, and as we are both mighty quick tempered we've resolved not to shake to wan another at all!"—London Tit-Bits.
