THE MAN WHO ADVERTISES.

The man who advertises is aggressive and progressive. He is the one who does most to build up his community. In this he may incur the ill-will of his non-progressive competitors, but he does the business and sells the goods. He is the booster and not the knocker. While he may be doing well he believes in doing better. While in business he will work it for all there is in it. He is neither penny wise nor pound foolish. The money spent in advertising is not thrown away, nor wasted and the advertiser knows it. Every dollar spent in judicious advertising yields large returns. The man who never advertises but sits around and grunts and growls at his successful competitors and kicks and knocks at the town does not corral the trade. Trade is like everything animate, it likes coaxing and needs to be sought. Business is greater than it seems, its possibilities infinite. Success depends upon management and not locality. The world is wide and after a man has corralled his own country there are 12,500 miles left in either direction.

CHAMBERLAIN MUST CHOOSE

Cannot Be Governor and Senator at Same Time in Washington.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 9.—When Governor and Senator-elect Chamberlain, of Oregon, arrives in the national capital on March 4 he will be called upon to decide an unimportant but interesting point that affects his state to a greater or less degree. On the other hand, if he decides to ride in the parade, along with the governors of other states, he will be obliged to postpone taking the oath as senator until some time after March 4. Chamberlain cannot be governor and senator at the same time. Having been duly elected he will draw pay as senator from March 4, and he can take the oath at any subsequent day, if he so elects.
