THURSDAY, Editorial Page. JULY 2

TRIUMPH OF THE PEOPLE.

The second analysis of the vote in Oregon on the 19 Initiative and referendum measures by Eastern papers, especially the national weeklies and magazines such as Colliers, the Outlook and others of that class, is very favorable both to the initiative and to the voting by the Oregon electorates.

The first criticisms were mainly based on reports and comments in such hostile Oregon papers as the Oregonian. Now that the Eastern editors are reviewing the election from the official returns, the tune has changed from sneers to praise.

The June election was not only a great triumph for the initiative and referendum but a greater one for democracy compared to representative government. Any unbiased man who knows of the work of the legislatures will testify that the vote of the people showed more careful study and discrimination than the product turned out in state capitals.

THE DENVER CONVENTION.

And now the dispatches say nothing sensational will be allowed to happen at the Denver convention. Mr. Bryan will be nominated on the first ballot, the platform will contain "moderately radical" trust-busting anti-injunction, railroad rate regulation, tariff revision planks, but nothing to scare anybody, not even the most timid Wall street gambler.

It begins to look as if the campaign would be one of men and no issues. If the cut and dried program is adopted at Denver, the difference between the Republican and Democratic platforms will be the difference between twiddle-dum and twiddle-dee.

However it is safest to not forecast too much in politics. All the wisecracks of both parties believed as late as April, 1896, the issue that fell would be the tariff and nothing but the tariff. Was it? If we remember rightly the subject of free silver was sometimes mentioned during the summer and fall of 1896.

So it is safest to not prophesy. Even if no "paramount issue" is evolved, just wait and see the wonderful difference in the two platforms the party orator will discover along about next October.

INDEPENDENCE DAY SPEECHES.

The spread-eagle Fourth of July speech is out of date. The American people have outgrown childish things and no longer sit unblushing while their many virtues, as well as their ability to whip any two or three effete European nations, are shouted into their ears by a red-faced, perspiring human windmill. That was the favorite Fourth of July recreation during the thirties and forties of the last century—that and drinking hard cider, ginger beer, and eating ginger cookies. Charles Dickens after his first visit to the United States in the forties, caricatured in Martin Chuzzlewit, that national trait of bombast and self-praise, and aroused a storm of indignation and abuse. Liar was among the least of the epithets applied to him by American newspapers and orators; we see that more clearly now and know that allowing for the usual Dickens exaggeration, he told the truth.

There was a style of Fourth of July speech in use just before the period of bombast that it would be well to revive. Independence Day orators during the first half-century of our national life dwelt upon the meaning of the liberty that was won by the Continental army. What was self government and why? In those days the enemies of government by the people were without, but it was clearly recognized by Jefferson, Madison and John Quincy Adams that it was not the machinery or form of government that was vital. They said if our representatives were corrupted by agents of the enemies of the Republic, we would cease to be self-governing.

Today danger of corruption of our representatives by a foreign power is past, or so remote as to be unworthy of concern. It is a notorious fact, however, that representatives in many instances, perhaps a majority no longer represent the people, but some special interest. If that is true and it is not even denied, would not a little more government by the people and less by "representatives," be corrective? We have tried it here in Oregon and so far no man can truthfully say it has not worked well.

What is the true meaning of self-government? Is it a form or a substance? Perhaps those subjects would be appropriate for the present-day Fourth of July orators.

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

The recent making-over of the News Record office into as completely equipped and up-to-date printing office as is found in Eastern Oregon represents the publishers' faith in Enterprise and Wallowa county. The day is at hand when this grand country is going to step into its own—to the head of the column of proud counties in Eastern Oregon, where our resources of agriculture, live stock, mining, timber and factory power entitles us. If two linotype machines are required in Union county, that has but 40 per cent more people and less than one-half the resources of Wallowa, cannot the latter afford one linotype? The answer to that is this:

To do the best work, the best of workmen need the best of tools. Heretofore thousands of dollars worth of printing has been bought ever year outside the county, not because of inferior workmen at home, but because those workmen lacked the tools. The News Record has provided the tools, and is prepared to do any work in the printing line that is required. It has no fear of the financial result if only the money heretofore sent to Portland and elsewhere for printing, is spent here in the county. The quality of the work is guaranteed equal to the best and the prices right. It is simply a question of keeping the dollars at home where we all get another chance at them, or kissing the goddess on our dollars goodbye forever and sending them to Portland.

CHANGE OF COUNTY OFFICIALS.

The last July change of county officers in Oregon takes place next Monday. Hereafter the biennial transfer will be made on the first Monday in January following the election in November.

Naturally the retiring officers, like a mere man at a wedding, came in for slight notice. All eyes are fixed upon the new "powers-that-be." However, in Wallowa county there are men leaving office who can look back with pride upon duty well performed even if that performance has brought upon them more or less popular disfavor. The whirligig of time will right all that and they will probably live to hear themselves cited as models for succeeding officials. That good luck and prosperity may attend them in private walks of life is certainly the wish of the majority of the people of this county.

No less hearty or sincere are the wishes for the success in office of the new officials. Honored by the confidence of their fellow citizens, it is only reasonable to believe the will be true to the trust reposed in them, and work as diligently and intelligently for the best interests of the county as they would for their own.

The new court is certainly setting a good example by equipping themselves at their own expense for the most important task before them—building a court house at the least cost necessary to provide for a structure adapted to the needs of the county.

No town now-a-days enjoys rapid growth from wholly natural causes. Transportation facilities, railroad rates, arbitrary decisions of capitalists or manufacturers here or there as it will, all are vital factors that interfere with the law of development in accordance with natural resources. Over and above all, however, is the quality of citizenship. Are they alive or sleeping? Are they willing to sink personal gain by sacrifice of the town's interest, for the broader view of what is best for all in the long run. That spirit and organization accounts for much of the difference in the up-building of towns. Youthful denial makes us sturdy manhood.

Baseball is the greatest sport in the world. Forty millions of tired Americans look eagerly each morning for "the score." It will live always. Anti-betting laws will only strengthen it, for to each baseball with gambling and you spoil the game for its devotees. Youth and manhood must have recreation. Baseball is the ideal recreation. Support it liberally by business methods but keep it clean from the taint of betting and the people's pastime will pack in pleasure, health and temperance a hundredfold.
