A good house enjoyed "The Captain's Mate," played by the Streeter-Bryan Company, Saturday evening. There is no very definite plot to the play and no striking situations of any kind in it, but the light vein of humor running through it is well adapted to these warm mid-summer evenings. Miss Blanche Bryan appeared before this audience for the first time in male attire as a stowaway on the ship, "Albatross," and with her usual winning way, was even more captivating than in most of her sou-brette costumes. Morrie B. Streeter, an Irish sailor, had the wit and good-heartedness of a true paddy. Harry J. Terry, as Captain Sydney Penfield, played the genial captain well and was as usual popular with the audience. F. M. Weeks, as old Joe, the blind sailor, and Bud Delaney, the dock thief, had two good characters and played them both with a complete understanding of the characters he impersonated. On next Saturday evening the most highly entertaining play, perhaps of this company's repertoire, "The Christian," will be played for the first time in Wallowa county.
