S. T. Daggett of Alder Slope was delivering a small lot of as nice honey in Enterprise, Friday, as was ever seen in this city, and surely disproved the old belief that bees would not do well in this valley. Every comb was filled and the taste was equal to the appearance, which is saying a lot. Mr. Daggett secured 21 pounds of surplus honey made in ten days by a hive of bees that swarmed only 25 days before he took the honey.

Morrice B. Streeter made a decided hit in Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde Wednesday evening of last week. The sudden change from the respected doctor of science to the hideous Mr. Hyde was wonderfully well done. The fight for supremacy after the visit of Jekyll's sweetheart in the last act and his tragic death reached a thrilling climax. Mr. Streeter is lithe and agile as a cat and the contortions of Mr. Hyde combined with his whinings and snarling was enough to drive one into hysterics, and worked the audience up to a gratifying pitch. A relaxation swept through the house when Mr. Streeter appeared before the curtain to make the announcement of "Olivette." These announcements have become a pleasing feature of the evening's program. In the kindly personal tone that they are given with a hospitable invitation to visit the cosy home-like camp of the company and a little sendoff for some pride of Enterprise such as her band leave a good taste in everybody's mouth even after such an outrageous play as Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. On next Saturday evening the company will present "Dora Thorne, and the crowd at the carnival will be repaid in remaining to witness it.
