Hawley Victim Of Murderous Thugs

Page Hawley of Union county is lying at the point of death in Copperfield dying from a fracture at the base of his skull and other wounds inflicted by J. J. Burns and G. Pratt, members of a pursuing posse who captured him. Burns and Pratt are under arrest and there are threats of lynching.

The story of the alleged crime is that Hawley sold a horse to one Stevens and later took the horse from the livery stable and started down the Snake river toward Wallowa county. A posse pursued, J. J. Burns and G. Pratt distancing the rest and capturing Hawley. On the return trip they say Hawley fell from his horse and sustained the injuries, but at Copperfield Burns and Pratt were jailed under suspicion of having dealt too summary justice on Hawley.

Hawley was well known in this county and spent most of last winter and spring at Enterprise and other valley towns. There is nothing against him except he was said to like the booze too hard.

George Hamilton of Joseph came in on Friday's train. He saw Hawley in Copperfield just before the trouble, and says Hawley fell into the hands of gamblers who won his horse and outfit against $20; that Hawley was full and probably did not remember the events of the night before, when he took his horse from the stable and started down the river.

JOSEPHINE "MARBLE HILLS" MADE NATIONAL MONUMENT

Washington, July 29.—The President has just signed a proclamation making a National Monument of the Oregon Caves or "Marble Hills" of Josephine county, in the Siskiyou National Forest about thirty miles south of Grant's Pass in Cave Mountain.

The caves are marble and other limestone and consist of innumerable caverns, corridors and passageways of various sizes, all of them decorated beyond description in crystallized carbonates. They have been explored to a distance of two miles or more, the lowest of them being at a depth of about 2,000 feet below the summit of Cave mountain, the highest being some seven or eight hundred feet above it. There are many passageways and rooms which have never been opened, and with these distant and unexplored openings the magnitude of the Oregon caves is practically unknown.

These natural wonders were discovered in 1874 by Eliza Davidson, while bear hunting, and the greater part of the exploration work was done by F. M. Nickerson, of Kerby, Oregon, in 1877, when four floors of levels were partially opened. Many of the old ladders used at that time are still in use.

Cave mountain, the peak which contains these caves, rises to an elevation of about 6,000 feet and is of limestone formation. The main openings around which the National Monument has been erected are at an elevation of 4,000 feet, but the entire mountain-side for five or six miles shows caverns of various sizes and in all probability is honeycombed throughout its interior like the portion which has been explored.

Many small streams are found at different elevations, and larger bodies of running water can be heard in bottomless pits so far as measured. This running water probably accounts for currents of wind that in some of the galleries blow so hard as to extinguish an open light at once.

The lime deposits take many beautiful forms; massive pillars, delicate stalactites of alabaster whiteness with the crystal drop of water carrying its minute deposit of lime from which they are formed, and broad sheets resembling drapery with graceful ful curves and waves that were certainly made by varying currents of wind during formation.

In past years visitors have broken off and carried away many of the valuable specimens and this destruction, as well as to retain these natural wonders as public property, induced the recommendation to place them in a National Monument.

The forest service has rebuilt and improved the trails leading to the caves from each side of the divide in order to more easily protect the valuable forest surrounding, and to make the caves more accessible to tourists.

If people with symptoms of kidney or bladder trouble could realize their danger they would without loss of time commence taking Foley's Kidney Remedy. This great remedy stops the pain and the irregularities, strengthens and builds up these organs and there is no danger of Bright's disease or other serious disorder.
