OAK LEAF DIET KILLS CATTLE IN SOUTHWEST

The stockmen grazing their cattle on the National Forests in the Southwest, especially in Colorado and New Mexico, have suffered serious losses during the present summer through the cattle eating oak leaves.

In that section of the country the season has been unusually dry and grass extremely scarce. To eke out the scanty forage supply, the cattle have browsed heavily on the scrub oak which covers large portions of the range. Ordinarily the stock does not browse much on the oak and the little they do get, taken with the other food, is not injurious, but when, as in the present season, the oak browse furnishes a large proportion of the daily food of the cattle, the results are serious.

The oak leaves and sprouts contain a large percentage of tannic acid. The action of this acid on the stomach is extremely injurious and the losses have been unusually severe. The symptoms of the disease are staring eyes, feverish and bilious lips and nose, the animal ceases to graze or seek for food, standing in one place for hours at a time. The coat becomes rough and the hair is turned the wrong way, as in case of loco poisoning. The animal does not chew its cud and in a comparatively short time it becomes too weak to remain on its feet and death rapidly follows.

So far as is known the only available remedy for this trouble is linseed oil given as a drench in amounts from one to two quarts. The oil appears to overcome the injurious effects of the tannic acid and if the disease is not advanced too far the animal can be furnished sufficient food so it will not be forced out the oak it will generally recover. The best method, of course, in handling the trouble, is, if possible, to get the cattle away from the range where the oak is found and furnish them with plenty of green feed to build up again.

PLANNING GREAT FAIR AT LA GRANDE

the possibilities of the two counties to put up an exhibit which will place the district in the forefront of all progressive communities. For this end the cooperation of every loyal citizen must be had in securing a thorough display of the resources of the section.

Perhaps the most human thing about J. Pierpont Morgan is his affection for apple pie. It may not answer to the description of a grand passion, but certain it is that the great financier cherishes a tenderness for apple pie that is as genuine in its way as was the preference of Abelard for the society of Heloise. At precisely 12:30 every working day, which means all days except Sunday, the Morgan office boy proceeds to a nearby lunch room and invests a dime of the big promoter's fortune in a mammoth piece of apple pie, which constitutes the great man's midday meal.

One evening, at his New York home on Madison avenue, Mr. Morgan and a few literary and artistic friends were discussing epigrams. Finally each member of the company proceeded in turn to quote the most striking and appropriate tombstone inscription he could remember. When it came Mr. Morgan's turn he declared that the most pathetic and expressive thing of the kind that had ever been brought to his attention was the following tribute to a disconsolate husband to his wife, who lies buried in the neglected little cemetery of a Maine village.

"She was good and true, and she was the best plowman in Somerset county."

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy Never Known to Fail.

"I have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy since it was first introduced to the public in 1872, and have never found one instance where a cure was not speedily effected by its use. I have been a commercial traveler for eighteen years, and never start out on a trip without this, my faithful friend," says H. S. Nichols of Oakland, Ind. Ter. For sale by Burnaugh & Mayfield.

Same Effect.
"Cyril" said his mother as they sat down to the breakfast table, "did you wash your face this morning?"
"Well, no, mamma," said he slowly, evidently casting in his mind for an excuse, "but," he added reassuringly, "I used a little before I came down stairs"—Bellminter.

Cholera Infantum Cured.

"Something like two years ago my baby, which was then about a year old, was taken seriously ill with cholera infantum—vomiting and purging profusely, writes J. F. Dempsey of Dampsey, Ala. I did what I could to relieve her but did her no good, and being very much alarmed about her went for a physician but failed to find one, so came back by Elder Bros. & Carter's store and Mr. Elder recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I procured a bottle of it, went home as quickly as possible and gave the baby a dose of the remedy. It relieved her in fifteen minutes and soon cured her entirely." For sale by Burnaugh & Mayfield.

THE RUSSIAN PEASANT.

Rapid and Poor, a Good Fellow Who Merely Exists.

"The Russian peasant does not live; he merely exists. 'Nitchewo' (it is nothing), he merely says when anything happens to him. Nothing matters, nothing could be worse, and 'Nitchewo' is his panacea for all evils. And yet the Russian moujik is really a fine fellow. Ordinarily, H. P. Kennard tells us in his book, 'The Russian Peasant,' he is a splendid, well built man, large limbed, large headed and healthy. He is equally unaffected by 20 degrees of frost or twenty glasses of vodka. He is clothed in winter more clothes than the average Englishman could stand up in."

He is unspeakably stupid, however, and his dream of happiness is to gorge, to sleep as much as possible through the winter and dance and sing in the summer. But the stranger's first objection to the moujik is that he smells—not because he does not wash himself. As a matter of fact, in every village there are public baths—bath-and the peasants wash themselves there unfailingly every Saturday in order to be allowed to go to church on Sunday, for the Orthodox church enjoins cleanliness.

The Russian peasant is always poor and generally in debt. He plows the land in the same way that his father plowed it and gets as little for his labor. His main worry in life is how to pay the governor's taxes. If he says he cannot pay he is flogged, or perhaps he will sell part of his next year's power of work—i. e., work for nothing for several months—to raise a loan, and of course he is worse off than ever the following year.

On Christmas night at dusk the marriageable village girls go out into the streets and meet their young men, and one says, "What is your name?" The young man answers "Foma," and she replies, "My husband's name is Foma."

Some days later at the girl's home relations are gathered together. There comes a knock at the door. The starosta and the young man enter, carrying loaves of bread. The starosta says something like this:
"We are German people, come from Turkey. We are hunters, good fellows. There was a time once in our country when we saw strange footprints in the snow, and my friend the prince here saw them, and we thought they might be a fox's or marten's footprints or it might be those of a beautiful girl. We hunters, we good fellows, are determined not to rest till we have found the animal. We have been in all cities from Germany to Turkey and have sought for this fox, this marten or this princess, and at last we have seen the same strange footprints in the snow again, here by your court. And we have come in. Come, let us take her, the beautiful princess, for we see her in front of us, or can it be that you would keep her till she grows a little older?"

Thus does the moujik ask for a wife.

Inventor Davy and Love.
Sir Humphry Davy, the inventor of the Davy lamp, found love something of a delusion, if not a snare. Writing to his mother, he said, "I am the happiest of men in the hope of a union with a woman equally distinguished for virtues, talents and accomplishments." And in a letter to his brother he expresses his rapture thus: "Mrs. Apprece has consented to marry me, and when the event takes place I shall not envy kings, princes or potentates." The widow must have been a person possessed of great powers of fascination, for Sir Henry Holland makes mention of her as a lady who made such a sensation in Edinburgh society that even a regius professor did not think it beneath his scholarship to go down on his knees in the street to fasten her shoe. The sequel need not be dwelt upon further than to add that the marriage turned out to be altogether a mistake.

Cured Hay Fever and Summer Cold.

A. S. Nasbaum, Batesville, Indiana, writes: Last year I suffered for three months with a summer cold so distressing that it interfered with my business. I had many of the symptoms of hay fever, and a doctor's prescription did not reach my case, and I took several medicines which seemed only to aggravate it. Fortunately I insisted upon having Foley's Honey and Tar. It quickly cured me. My wife has since used Foley's Honey and Tar with the same success." Burnaugh & Mayfield.

Rules of Color Harmony.

Much sound advice on the buying of rugs is contained in an article in the Woman's Home Companion for September. In regard to color it says: "A floor should be the lowest or darkest tone in a room, then the walls, and the ceiling the lightest or highest. This is the natural way and the safest to follow as a general rule. It gives a feeling of firmness and solidity to the floor, whereas, if the order is reversed, and the floor is lighter than the ceiling, one feels that the ceiling is coming down on one's head and that dodging is the only way to escape a blow. The floor should support the walls in color as well as in fact, but care must be taken not to make the mistake of thinking that strength of color is obtrusiveness of color. Strength of color in the right place will make the scheme of decoration a successful and satisfying one, but obtrusiveness of color will make a hopeless failure of it."

"The chief color of the rug should be the chief color of the walls—not necessarily the same tone, but harmonizing tones of the same shade. If the walls are a soft yellow, a rug with different shades of brown, and to give the needed note of contrast, dull soft red and blues, would look well in the room. This kind of rug would also go well with green or blue walls. The proportion of the different colors in a rug may make or mar it for one's special use. In choosing a rug it is best to have a feeling of one predominant color, with the other colors adding the snap that contrast gives, and forming a harmonious and delightful whole."

If you are all run down Foley's Kidney Remedy will help you. It strengthens the kidneys so they will eliminate the impurities from the blood that depress the nerves, and cause exhaustion, backache, rheumatism, and urinary irregularities, which sap the vitality. Do not delay. Take Foley's Kidney Remedy at once, Burnaugh & Mayfield.
