OS-TE-O-P-ATHY.
Let Us Not Call Them Incurables.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, who has become not less known for her broad-minded humanitarianism and progressive thinking in mature life than she was famous for her poems of sentiment and passion in earlier years, joins in the opposition to naming certain of our hospitals and asylums "Homes for Incurables." In a Chicago newspaper of recent date she said this to say:
"Christian D. Larson, editor of 'Eternal Progress,' (Cincinnati), says some eminently excellent things. He speaks particularly of the need of changing the names of some institutions, first of all the 'homes for incurables.'"
"Mr. Larson declares most emphatically that the name of such an institution militates against the health and happiness of its inmates. He proceeds to state the fact, which each one of us can prove in our own experience and observation, that a large percentage of maladies proclaimed 'incurable' by consulting physicians have eventually been cured, and that the sufferers have gone forth well and happy to enjoy many years of good health."
"Personally I know of one young woman who, through an accident, was paralyzed during three years, and skilled specialists in America and Europe pronounced her incurable. Yet osteopathy cured her, and she is robust and rejoicing today."

She was the mother of eight sons and two daughters, of whom the following survive: H. A. of La Grande, A. R. and Vern O. of Joseph, Otto of Wallowa, Ernest and O. E. of Paradise, and Mrs. Linda Chandler of Baker City. All were present at the funeral.

WAGON JOURNEY TO CENTRAL CALIFORNIA
September 24 we drove to Fall City located on the banks of Fall river, and made camp over night. Here it rained all night and until noon the next day. After dinner we started on. We are now finding a good deal of fruit, it being about the first fresh fruit we have found since leaving home. We certainly enjoyed it. We all have good appetites by this time. We find ourselves picking up quite fast in flesh, except Mrs. Davis, who took sick shortly after starting on our trip; the cause we could not account for unless it was the change of water. Shortly after starting we missed our road and got off on a logging road; not knowing it at the time, we climbed a steep hill that was all rocks. We thought it the roughest public road we ever traveled but we kept going on it for seven miles and finally ran entirely out of a road. So we then took a back track, and started on the right road. We are now camped at the head of Burney Valley and are making tracks fly. We have come a distance of 9 miles today. Mr. Wortman who drove the horse we gave away, was now missing him, and taking it pretty hard. The girls were joshing him so much on his missing companion they threatened to get some black crepe for his hat, but could not get it at the present time so they let it go. Shortly after leaving our camp grounds there we started thru the Fall River canyon which was 9 miles through. The Fall river ran down through it on one side and the road went down the opposite side; every few feet the river making falls made it very beautiful through this canyon, also large rocks and cliffs of all shapes and sizes hanging over its banks and falls made it very pretty. Evergreens also mixed among the rocks. The largest fall was about 50 feet, and about 5 feet from that another fall 35 feet. All colors could be seen among the falls. After viewing this beautiful place, we went on and shortly after we left the canyon we came to several tall, sharp rocks, which looked like Indian tepees. We thought they were but as we drew closer we found them to be a soft, lime rock, but they were cut up and fire places cut in them and benches, stoves, and different things cut in them that were very interesting and amusing, which we all had to stop and examine. While we were stopped, Mr. Littleton, who had his cotak with him, had the girls climb up on the tall rocks and then he took several snap-shots of them. We journeyed onward getting to Burney Valley at 4 o'clock and camped for the night.
