From the Portland Journal of Jan. 26. BUTTER MARKET TENDS DOWNWARD.

Prices Are So Low Elsewhere That It Is Likely Portland Will Be Forced.

There is a very weak tone in the butter market owing to the pressure of outside supplies, but local creamery interests are still quoting the former range.

So far as the local manufactured product is concerned there is no surplus in the trade here but it is the over supply of outside manufacture that is causing the trouble.

Butter is very weak in the east and supplies of extras can be brought from there and placed on the local market at so much lower figure than the present value of the home product that it is quite easy to see where the trade would go.

This will probably force the local makers to change their quotations. There is a difference of opinion among creamery interests as to whether this is necessary at the present time, but the general opinion seems to be that there will be a change during the first part of the coming week.

PASSENGER TRAIN STILL MATTER OF FAR FUTURE.

General Superintendent J. D. Stack made an inspection trip over the branch this week, staying a day at Joseph. He is reported as saying the passenger train is still a matter of the future, but that larger engines will be used on the branch train in an effort to run nearer to schedule time.
