ANY STAR BOARDERS AMONG YOUR HENS?

is undoubtedly true. A hen may have the egg laying capacity, but without vigor she won't produce eggs. On the other hand, the hen may have vigor without egg-laying capacity. She may have constitutional vitality and lay less than 20 eggs a year. The point is that by selecting for vigor or alone we won't make very rapid progress in breeding up a strain of layers. We have to select for both vigor and egg capacity. The trapnest enables us to do this. The hen that lays 200 eggs a year has good vitality, so that a high egg record is an indication of high vitality. It is possible, of course, that the 200-egg hen will not produce chicks of good vigor; it is also possible that her eggs may not be very fertile. That is another question. It is possible that very heavy laying may injure her breeding qualities; that is a debatable point. But the fact remains that the hen that lays 150 eggs or more a year has good vitality, and it is such hens that we must depend upon to increase the egg yield and make poultry keeping more profitable. A high egg record indicates constitutional vitality—stamina. The trapnest, therefore, selects for vigor as well as egg-laying capacity.

"If each state would take hold of this in earnest, I believe that in a few years it would add millions of dollars to the profits of the poultry keeper, and at the same time help solve the problem of the nation's food supply."

Geo. S. Hunt and Will L. Corbett of Enterprise filed homestead applications in the La Grande land office Thursday.
