The manager of the new Co-operative Packing Company reports the purchase of about 300 turkeys which he will ship to San Francisco for Santa Claus.

The poultry producers are becoming enthusiastic over this new means of marketing turkeys, and are expecting some of them to raise from 300 to 500 turkeys next year. This packing company gives producers a market for an unlimited amount of products. They talk with money in their hands. It makes the ranchers smile to have a man come round with the yellow metal, and then thank them for their business besides. But this is bright and enterprising. It is the way city folks do it, no bull-dozing or big I and little you.

This packing company is being organized to benefit members of the Century Mercantile Company of San Francisco, a co-operative merchandise company, through which its people may purchase their supplies at wholesale and factory prices and market their products at top market prices. They have been doing business for twenty years and are pronounced by banks and customers to be trustworthy.
