A spur to his endeavor will undoubtedly be found in the fact, as shown by immigration statistics, that the character of foreign imgration to the United States is changing for the worse. The preponderance has for several years been from Southern and Southeastern Europe and Russia, where not only the standard of intelligence and morals are lower than in other sections, but the physical standard ia lower also. This is a serious mat'er, as the overcrowded hospitals and charitable institutions of New York and other immigration ports amply testify. The country's power of absorption is enormous, but when it comes to an overdose of physical weaklings, of low-grade morals and mentality, the body politic may become clogged with indigestible material. It is manifest, therefore, that our immigration laws should be rigidly enforced against the incoming horde of undesirables, and that that those who pass official muster and effect a landing should be admitted to the full privileges of citizenship only after full compliance with the strict letter and spirit in dairying. of our naturalization laws .- Oregon-
