The Vice of Idleness

Of all vices to which young men become slaves, idleness is by no means the least. It is a vice easily contracted in youth and hard to throw off in manhood or old age. Unfortunately, it is not generally looked upon as an evil in the sense that drinking, gambling and debauchery are evils, yet its influence is no less certain in breaking down character and sapping physical and intellectual strength. Fathers and mothers who would be shocked at the suggestion that they would permit their boys to smoke cigarettes allow their children to acquire form day to day habits of idleness which on effort of after years is likely to overcome. It is out of idleness, largely, that other vices grow, and, this one avoided there is small danger of the child becoming addicted to others.

Idleness is a habit, and, like most evil habits, an unnatural one. Young children are full of life and activity, and desire to be doing something. Their minds are alert and observing; their muscles are full of pent-up energy seeking every opportunity for escape. The child who was "born lazy" is as rare as the boy who was born with a hunchback, a crippled limb or a defective mind. It is lack of opportunity, inculcation of wrong ideas of work, and absence of reasonable encouragement in commendable effort, that takes the life out of a boy and makes him an idler, a saloon loafer or a tramp. The mother whose care of her four-year-old is limited to "don't do this and don't do that," the father who fails to provide work and play for the boy when he has passed from the mother's care, are not only encouraging but enforcing idleness.

The trouble is that we do not look upon idleness as a wrong—as a sin. Religious teachers who insist that no work should be done on the Sabbath day forget that the command, "Six days shalt thou labor," preceded the command to rest on the seventh day, and all the stress is laid upon the command to rest. While it is true that to some extent public opinion censures the idle poor, it does not look with the same disapproval upon the idle rich. The young lady who insists upon high moral standards exclaims that "lips that touch liquor shall never touch mine," but does not declare that "the hand that rests in idleness shall never hold mine." Too often the hand of the idler is given preference and honest labor is looked upon with contempt. Men who contribute neither physical nor intellectual effort toward supplying the wants of the world are too often made the pets of society. The idler is a dishonest debtor, he is rich or poor, for he refuses to pay the obligation he owes to the world for the necessities, pleasures and comforts it affords him.—Oregonian.

Municipal Ownership in Chicago

Chicago, Apr. 5.—Mayor-elect Edward F. Dunne, within an hour after he was assured of his election, re-affirmed his publicly expressed conviction that municipal ownership of street railways is possible in Chicago within two years.

He said: "In dealing with a mayor or of iron will and a friendly council, the companies inevitably take a fair price for their property and give us municipal ownership in two years. This is what I expect but if a fight is what they want, we will give it to them, in and out of court."

On the other hand, friends of the street railway corporations do not fear that the municipal ownership idea will be carried out. They rely on the council as safe, and point out that practically the same men are in the council at present as have favored renewal of the franchises to the street railway companies, but with a provision of eventual municipal ownership.

James Sneed, aged about 20 years, well known in this section, is now in the county jail at this place, serving out a 30-day term for appropriating an overcoat, umbrella and cane at a hotel in Myrtle Point. The articles belonged to Billy Knight.

Coal Miners Wanted.—D. Rouse, superintendent of the Coquille Co's mine at Riverton, is now in shape to employ several more men at good pay.

A larger water pipe was ordered installed on Fourth street, west of Moulton, for supply of residents in that locality.
