THE COQUILLE RIVER By W. Eugene Smith. Earth has her mysteries; deep bosomed sky Holds not mere potent influences; Each morn A thousand forms arise, elusive Sprites, They vanish as Aurora's orb, new born Scatters her parbs of sunshine far and nigh, By lake and mere and tree-crowned, verdant heights.

At earliest break of day appear to view Vaporous beings, wraiths they seem to be, Some in the lower valleys hovering, Some mounting higher in a revelry Of cloud-like dance and one or two Cresting the hill in their meandering.

Mirrored in one, a noble phantasy, As of a lordly stream appears, whose way Reflects the smiling banks, tree, shrub and flower, The peopled mart and azure-colored nave Greet our pleased vision, as vicariously

The limpid depths reveal a maiden's face, And as she rises, slips the tide away, Lower and lower 'till she stands quite dry, Amid grass plots. The rippling wavelets play Of sound into her gentle voice gives place, Yet faint it is, as faint breezes sigh.

Death of Oldest Pioneer.

William Abernethy, formerly of Dora in this county, but who moved with his family thirteen years ago to Forest Grove, was on Thursday last reported to be critically ill at his home there of pneumonia. Owing to his advanced age, 85 years, and also to the fact that he had been feeble for some time, it was anticipated that the end was near, and word to that effect was received by Ed Aberenthy, the oldest son, who lives on the old home place at Dora. He left on Friday morning's train for Forest Grove, and M. T. Clinton left Sunday even-ing to attend Farmers' Week at O. that Mr. Abernethy had passed away
