

SOUTHERN TRIP

S. H. Warren writes of the Pleasures of Antoining in California.

Writing from San Diego, California, our former fellow citizen, S. H. Warren, says:

"It might be of interest to some of the many readers of the Sentinel to know of our wanderings since leaving Coos county in September last. We have spent some time in southern Oregon and northern California, and left Sacramento about the middle of December for southern California, via the inland route, our objective point being Riverside.

"We had excellent weather and the finest roads that could be imagined. We drove for 80 miles on level, paved roads with hardly a crook or turn. The people of California are greatly interested in good roads, as shown by their voting an additional 15 million for that purpose, besides the tax on autos amounting to 2 or 3 millions more. The tourist is by no means slighted, as we know by being required to pay our assessment of $9.00 on our car, which is worth the price for the pleasure of these fine roads.

"Our route takes us through Stockton, Fresno, Bakersfield, Burbank, Pasadena and Pomona. The beautiful country through which we passed is very fertile, except a few stretches of worthless land which is a bed of rock and gravel. We stopped the third night out at Bakersfield, one of the great oil regions of California, but a few miles further on our level road ends for a long drive through the Sierra Nevada mountains, where the scenic beauty is most wonderful. The highway is a wide graveled roadway with easy grades and a zig-zag course around through the rocky cliffs. There are no trees of any kind on these mountains, but growths of grease wood or sage brush. Some fine lakes are seen here. We arrived at Riverside the fourth day out. This is a fine little city of 15,000 people in the heart of the great orange and lemon district, but we were somewhat disappointed in climate there. Several mornings both frost and ice were seen during our two weeks' stay there and nearby hills were white with snow. So we cranked up our little Ford and headed for San Diego, 125 miles southeast, and here we find it more congenial, but with considerable rain. Don't think it is continual sunshine here. We had a solid week of cloudy, rainy weather and while it is now clearing up, I don't think Coos could have beat it. But the winter rains here are very much needed for that is all the rain they get during the year. It is fine again now and we are having some good old summer time again. We drove over into old Mexico the other day and visited the little old town of Tia Juana, one mile across the border. The customs officer went through our car but found nothing so we passed on. We find no improvement in the town since our visit eight years ago. It is a typical Mexican city. Vice of all kinds reigned; drinking, gambling and horse racing are the order of the day and the tourist can soon part with some of his good American dollars if he mixes with them. I can't see what there is here worth fighting for, yet there have been two battles fought here since their troubles began.

"Returning to God's country we are again held up at the border, this time by a Mexican officer, but nothing doing and we passed over with 'Old Glory' floating over us. The scene is different now. Instead of a treeless waste we find fine lawns, attractive buildings and all the indications of prosperity. We stop a little while in the town of Otay (Oti), which was nearly destroyed a year ago by the bursting of the great Otay reservoir at the head of that valley. We pass through beautiful Chula Vista, the great lemon section, and on through the 'Avenue of Palms' to National City, with its tropical plants and flowers, following a beautiful drive back to this city.

"San Diego is one of the old towns of California and the first mission built in the State is here, but in ruins. The olive trees, however, are still in full bearing though planted more than a hundred years ago by the Spanish priests; but my letter is already too long and will close. We expect the Sentinel now each week while here."

Most Water from Reserves.

It is estimated that four-fifths of the water available for irrigation and domestic use in the state of Oregon comes from the timber-clad slopes of the National Forests. The average acre of national forest land in the state sends to the streams sixteen times as much water as does the average acre of land outside the forest boundaries.

Camas Valley Man Hurt.

George Smith, of Camas Valley, was brought to this city today suffering from a broken shoulder and wrist he sustained when he fell near his home yesterday. It appears that he was walking in the mountains in that vicinity yesterday when in some manner he slipped and fell over a bluff, falling a distance of forty or fifty feet.—Roseburg News.

Oregon's Mineral Wealth.

The December number of the Mineral Resources of Oregon, published by the Oregon Bureau of Mines and Geology, is a complete handbook of the mining industry of the state. Information concerning all the mines, mining companies and prospects in Oregon is given, in addition to a general description of the various mining districts. The work, containing 304 pages, was compiled by H. M. Parks, director of the bureau, and A. M. Swartley, mining engineer of the bureau.

According to the compilers, the total mineral products sold in the state in 1916, including the non-metallies, amounted to about $5,500,000. The production included gold, silver, platinum, copper, lead, antimony, quick-silver, tungsten and chromium and was the largest in the history of the state.

The total production of all metals in Oregon up to the present time is estimated at $140,000,000. Of this total $105,000,000 was produced in eastern Oregon and $35,000,000 in the western part of the state.

"Ores of the precious metals have been mined in the various mountainous sections of eastern Oregon since 1861 and in the southwest counties for the past 65 years," reads the survey. "The main streams in these sections also have furnished from year to year a varying production of placer gold. Gold has been taken from the beach sands along the coast for years and a small amount of platinum and its associates of the rarer metals is produced annually. Although it was a secondary product of gold and silver ores before that date, copper was not shipped in regular quantities until 1905.

"Oregon supplies its own needs in building stone, clays and the common clay products, and possesses an abundance of raw materials for making lime and Portland cement. It has inexhaustible supplies of sand and gravel which are suitable and being used for many purposes. Coal has been mined for years in the vicinity of Coos Bay, Coos county, and lignite and sub-bituminous coals are known to exist in various parts of the state."

Coos in Popular Mechanics.

Under the heading "New Railroad Penetrates Great Oregon Lumbering District," the February issue of Popular Mechanics contains a fine article on the coming of the railroad to Coos county and the wonderful resources of the Bay country, illustrating the same with five photo reproductions.

The article opens with a description of the work of the pioneers who developed the country without railroad facilities and with only an indifferent stage and steamship service with the outside world, and proceeds to describe the great work undertaken by the Southern Pacific Company which resulted in Coos county being linked with the other centers by a fine railroad.

The mineral, timber and farming prospects of the county are dealt with and the article is well written, without exaggeration. The circulation of Popular Mechanics is nearly half a million and an unsolicited advertisement of this nature will do much to bring the possibilities of what is practically the last of the undeveloped Golden West before a large section of the East and Middle West.

Ties and Poles in Curry.

W. E. Best, of Bandon, and a timber cruiser, or estimator, spent several days at Port Orford during the past week looking over the tie and pole timber in this section. It is announced that a large amount of this material will be shipped from here during the coming summer. Some cutting has been going on in the woods all winter, but the force of men engaged in the work will be increased immediately, and a lively season in this industry here is planned.—Tribune.

Grace Dollar Rechristened.

The name of the steamer Grace Dollar, for many years a familiar figure in the lumber trade of the coast, has been changed to the Admiral Wainwright since she was sold recently by the Dollar interests to the Pacific Coast Steamship company.

The vessel is to be operated under the new name in the Alaska service out of Puget Sound, it has been announced. She is now en route to Puget Sound from San Francisco.—Times.
