Mrs. Lamb Entertains.

Mrs. J. A. Lamb entertained the J. G. W. club and guests Tuesday evening with a 7 o'clock dinner. The rooms were very prettily decorated with spring flowers and the two tables at which the guests were seated were beautiful in their adornment of dahlias. After enjoying the bounteous feast the ladies spent the remainder of the evening with fancy work and conversation. Mrs. Lamb was assisted by Mesdames E. E. Johnson, Fred Slagle and C. A. Howard.

Those present beside the above mentioned were Mesdames J. S. Lawrence, H. N. Butler, Henry Lorenz, Geo. Lorenz, Ed Lorenz, M. O. Hawkins, C. W. Endicott, Aaron Wilson, C. T. Skeels, A. N. Gould, C. McC. Johnson, C. A. Schroeder, C. J. Fuhrman, W. H. Lyons, H. A. Young and Miss Mary Davenport.

Dog Poisoner is Busy.

About one o'clock Sunday night Officer Jackson noticed a dog acting in a peculiar manner, twitching and frothing at the mouth. Whether the dog, which belonged to A. A. Paull, was mad or had been poisoned is not known, but the fact that another dog has been poisoned and still another disappeared leads to the belief that some one has been putting out strychnine, which is a violation of the State law. Mr. Jackson shot at the dog Sunday night down on Front street and finally killed him back of the Figg building across from the city hall. Altogether five shots were fired and residents in this section were wondering if a detachment of Germans had attacked the city.

New Officers of Moose.

The annual election of Ko-Keel Lodge No. 568, Loyal Order of Moose, was held last evening with the following result:

Nick Johnson will cry the sale.

Nick Johnson, the Norway merchant, was a Coquille visitor yesterday.

Don't forget that our 4-magazine offer at 2 bits still holds good.

Talk With a World Walker.

Last Monday afternoon a unique specimen of the genus home dropped into the Sentinel office in the person of Henry Stewart, "World Walker of the San Diego Exposition," as he terms himself. An alert, wiry man of 67 with a full, gray beard, he might have passed unnoticed in a crowd but for the brass buttons, medals and insignia of various sorts with which his hat was covered and which were literally scattered over his coat and surtout as well. These with a book full of testimonials and pictures he has been accumulating constituted his stock in trade and apparently sufficed to provide him bed and board when "dead broke" as travelling pilgrims like him usually are.

Stewart said he had walked 45,000 miles to advertise the San Diego fair, and kept himself. He had been all over the United States and a considerable portion of Europe, Asia and Africa and had rubbed up against people in all conditions of life.

In Jerusalem he met one of the Jews who had taken part in the Zionist movement and gone back to help restore the Holy Land to its ancient grandeur, but who honestly admitted, "I wish I was back in Chicago."

He had the autograph of our friend Arthur Capper, who is now governor of Kansas and also of Joseph Tumulty, private secretary to President Wilson, and could tell what the latter said to him about being the most closely confined prisoner in Washington. He had also talked with the late Lord Kitchener, who declined to furnish his autograph, explaining that he only affixed that to official documents.

Stewart thought it a great concession on the part of the commander-in-chief of the Portuguese army when the latter went into another room to get a box of buttons, of which he gave him two. But he couldn't sport them because they had been stolen. He had things enough of the sort left, however, to stock a curio shop, and showed a portrait of himself in a cast-off uniform presented him by a British staff officer in Egypt, where he interviewed the Sphinx and climbed the big pyramid. The picture of this he had showed the quarry from which the rocks for the latter were taken, so that it looked as if his statement that the Sphinx was carved from the elevation on which the hoisting apparatus stood while the rocks below were being taken out, might be true.

Stewart was now on a hike to the Peace river valley in British Columbia, back of the Alaskan fringe that runs down the west coast. There he expects to take up some government land, marry a war widow and settle down to grow up with the country and raise a Canadian family.

Another Coosonian Dance.

Saturday, March 17, or the 17th of Ireland as the bills say, is the date for the next dance given by the Coosonians and the Coosonian Band. It will be held in Heazlet Hall, with bargain prices prevailing—74¢ cents for gentlemen. The bare announcement that it is to be a Coosonian dance is sufficient for all those who have enjoyed their affairs in the past. To those who have not attended their previous dances it is only necessary to say, go once. It will mean regular attendance thereafter.

DOUGH AND SWEETING HER FAVORITE STUDIES

Daughter of Illinois Governor Elect in "Old Fashioned" Class.

New York.—Cooking is coming into its own as a feminine accomplishment. Hard upon the announcement that the helresses to the Zimser fortune must and can qualify in a cooking test comes word that Miss Florence Lowden, daughter of the governor elect of Illinois, Frank O. Lowden, and granddaughter of the late George M. Pullman, millionaire sleeping car manufacturer, prefers domestic science to other studies.

Asked whether she intended to take charge of the kitchen in the governor's mansion in Springfield, Ill., Miss Lowden, who is nineteen and pretty, replied a bit indignantly that she was not.

"I'm not a professional cook," she declared. "But I was very much interested in domestic science when I was studying at Westover. Anyway, I'm going to be in New York this winter studying, though what and where I don't know yet."

"And when they say that my father is especially fond of my creamed potatoes," she continued, "why, it's the most ridiculous joke I ever heard in my life."

Miss Lowden is the oldest of four children. Both she and her sister Harriet attracted much newspaper attention in 1910 when they were ill from infantile paralysis at their summer home in Oregon, and their father made a record trip across the country to a record. Their mother, who was Miss Florence Pullman, is a noted beauty.

A Rothschild Maxim.

"Be cautious, but bold," the great Rothschild claimed as his chosen business maxim.

Farmers Attention!

We want to remind you of some seasonable articles for this time of the year.
