Convicts To Be Educated.
Steps have been taken to organize a school of extensive scope and practical courses for the convicts at the state penitentiary. The school will open about December 1 and after that recommendations for parole will probably depend largely upon the efficiency of the convict in his work in some of these courses. All courses are practically and generally to learn a trade, so when the convict educates himself out of prison, he will have educated himself into a useful and profitable trade.

At the present time the following courses have been decided upon: American literature, practical arithmetic, spelling, United States history, geography, English literature, grammar, book-keeping, writing, reading, physics, Shakespeare, hygiene, agriculture, poultry, civics, mechanical drawing, bookbinding, cookery, music, laundry and gas engines.

Volunteers to teach these branches will be called for and some responses have already been made. Two penitentiary chaplains, Rev. Father Moore of the local Catholic church, and Rev.
Philip Bauer, will act as superintendents and do a great deal of teaching.
L. R. Alderman, state superintendent of public instruction, will assist in directing the school and deliver occasional lectures.

Superintendent James of the penitentiary has begun the drainage of some swampy land nearby, where agriculture may be taught the convicts. Governor West, who has had this plan in mind for several months, has been waiting for the busy season to close before having it launched. Penitentiary officials are a unit in working with enthusiasm for the new line of prison reform.

A Delicate Question.

From Life, September 24, 1908.
Is a man's first duty to his own family or to his client?
Take, for instance, a patient—call him William—who is being treated for a disease considered incurable. His doctor, of the old school, tells him frankly and kindly that the best thing he can do is to hold the disease in check, prolong William's life, perhaps, and make his remaining days comfortable.

While this treatment is going on William begins to hear tales of what the osteopaths are doing. His friends tell him of sudden cures of case resembling his own. William hates quackery, but as he cannot ignore this testimony, he finally mentions the subject to his doctor. His doctor, a liberal-minded man, tells William, regretfully, that while the osteopaths, like other quacks, produce temporary results that amaze the ignorant, they work far more harm than good; that osteopathy is merely a form of massage at best, and that William's disease is a deeper matter. Besides, the osteopathic treatment is "rough," and "often dangerous."

William is secretly relieved by this information, for he hates changing about and he has no use for all the "pathies."
But the surprising tales persist in reaching him. Even members of his own family relate extraordinary cures of seemingly hopeless cases, without drugs or surgery. Finally, to make a long story short, William, who does want to live, visits an osteopath. He is ashamed, but he does it. The theory and treatment, as explained to him, certainly seem rational. Moreover, he finds these osteopaths are curing cases much worse than his own. And when William himself is cured he blames the old school doctor for not sending him at once to the osteopath.
But is William just?

Is it ever expected that a lawyer, a doctor, an architect, or any man of standing shall say to his client, "Go to my rival. He is wiser than I am.
Give your money to him instead of to me?"
In accusing the old school doctor of fraud William is doubly unfair, as that doctor despises the osteopath and honestly believes him a quack. And we all know how easy it is to believe what is most desirable.

William argues, however, the success of osteopathy now being common knowledge, that when he pays a doctor for advice the doctor should give whatever advice is most likely to lead to a cure.
The doctor might argue that he gave William what William paid for, the best treatment he knew how to give.
Which is right?

ing a newspaper does by the kind of a paper it prints. The Sentinel is willing to let its paper be an ad. for its
