$1.50 Coal Carries $2 in Gold.

An interesting feature about the coal mined at Cambria, Wyo., is that it is claimed to be gold-bearing. Some of the coal has contained as much as $2 per ton in gold, and the coal was sold for only $1.50 per ton. When coke made at Cambria was selling for $3.50 per ton samples were taken from 31 cars during a period of three weeks and assayed. The samples showed an average of $2.46 per ton in gold and $0.28 in silver. The explanation offered for the presence of gold in this coal is that the sands which submerged the old peat bog and now form the roof of the coal bed were derived in part from gold-bearing alluvium. While the sand was being deposited the gold of all known coal exposures around the Black Hills, extending from Sundance and Aladdin, Wyo., to the openings in the bank of Cheyenne River east of Edgemont, S. Dak. Four different coals, bituminous, splint, cannel and "pine needle," are produced here. The conclusion reached is that none of the coal localities around the edge of the Black Hills, except Cambria, will ever add to the state's record of coal produced and shipped. The report is fully illustrated.

The information contained in this report was collected by Mr. Stone at various times while he was examining lands for classification. It was not originally compiled for publication, but it proved to be so comprehensive and complete that it has been assembled worked down into the underlying bog and is now found in the coal.

This is one of the interesting statements made in a report to be published in a few days by the U. S. Geological Survey. It is Bulletin 499, entitled "Coal Near the Black Hills, Wyoming-South Dakota," by R. W. Stone.

What the coal will do under a boiler is shown by comparative tests made by the Cambria Fuel Co., at Cambria, by the Lincoln Traction Co., Lincoln, Neb., and by the Geological Survey fuel-testing plant at St. Louis. These tests are compared with the similar tests made on competing coals. Besides a description of the coal field and coal mining operations at Cambria, which is 7 miles north of Newcastle, Wyo., the report contains a description
