Busby's Minstrels.

Minstrelsy, au la circus style, delighted a large audience of Ogden people last evening, the event being the visit of J. D. Busby's big minstrel show under canvas. The show was given a most liberal patronage, which it merited in every sense of the word.

Mr. Busby has assembled a big company of colored people who are bubbling over with minstrel songs and music. The show carries its own band and orchestra, in addition to a large number of good singers and good dancers. The big minstrel forepart is of course the feature, but the olio is a program of specialties which are most entertaining.

While many, no doubt, cannot conceive of a staged production under canvas, they have but to witness a performance such as that given by the Busby company to appreciate not only the possibility, but the high grade success which has been attained by this gentleman in his tented minstrel show.—Ogden Morning Examiner. Thursday, June 13.

The Wilbur Co. pleased a large audience in Dora Thorne Monday night at the Arcade theatre.

WILL TEACH THE TEACHERS

Special Instruction at O. A. C. Summer Session, June 10-July 26, This Year.

The extraordinary interest shown by the bankers' association, commercial clubs and other organizations throughout the state in the industrial contests for school children now in progress in all districts, means that the schools must incorporate in the regular course some systematic instruction in industrial branches. The work can not be confined to the high school or the seventh and eighth grades, but is bound to cover the entire course with the proper adaptation to the ages of the pupils in the different grades.

For this reason school superintendents, principals and teachers will need to familiarize themselves with the spirit and purpose of this new education, and to secure material to present to the pupils. To this end the summer session at the Oregon Agricultural College this year, which opens June 18 and lasts until July 26, will offer special instructions. Nowhere could there be found a body of experts better prepared to give the teachers this very assistance than in the faculty of the agricultural college. The domestic science department is ready to assist in the outlining of courses of instruction for the girls from the lowest grades through the high school; the engineering college will do the same for the manual training courses in the schools; and all departments of agricultural study will offer similar aid in planning the work in agriculture for both rural and city schools.

Ten courses in elementary and advanced agriculture are to be given, four in domestic science, three in domestic art, and three in manual training. These are all in addition to the regular pedagogic studies always included for those who wish to increase their equipment as teachers. The methods of teaching these industrial subjects in both town and country schools, general problems of school management, and the special problem of the one room school will be handled by expert instructors.

Upon inquiry in the east as to the best man for practical instruction on the country school, Prof. E. D. Pessler, director of the summer session, was informed that the national authority on the subject is H. D. Showalter, principal of the Washington State Normal School at Cheney, Wash., and he has been secured for O. A. C. for this summer, together with several other able men and women from other institutions.

In some states school boards offer teachers special inducements to prepare themselves more thoroughly for their work, either by paying a part of the expense of the summer course, or by raising the salaries of those who are willing to spend their vacations in study. The cost at O. A. C. is remarkably low, $40 covering everything excepting the railroad fare.

An enthusiastic teacher qualified to instruct the boys and girls and to inspire them with a living interest in industrial work, may be the means not merely of adding great wealth to the material resources of the district, but also of developing a higher efficiency and more substantial qualities of character among the pupils.

Sufficient concrete to put a six-inch cover on a fifty foot street a mile long is contained in just one pier of the new Sacramento River bridge of the Southern Pacific Company, recently completed and placed in operation as a part of the double tracking of the system. Completed, the new bridge is 2,200 feet in length, contains 19,000 cubic yards of concrete and 3,200,000 pounds of steel. It has the heaviest swing span of any like structure yet erected, weighing 6,300,000 pounds.

The upper deck has an eighteen foot wagon road with a five-foot sidewalk on each side. The lower deck is to be used for the double tracks of the Southern Pacific. The pier upon which the bridge rests averages 90 feet in height, or about as tall as an eight story office building, and each occupies a space as large as an ordinary city lot.
