Pocatella Will Pave

Practically Unanimous Decision for Bitulithic.—Property Owners Pleased.

The award recently made at Pocatello, Idaho, for bitulithic paving, was practically unanimous, as the decision was reached only after the committee appointed for that purpose, and a number of interested property owners had made a very thorough investigation of the paving in use in the more progressive cities of the northwest. The durability of this paving, which means a low cost of maintenance, combined with its beautiful appearance, the entire absence of chuck-holes and the fact that it has a non-slippery surface, which adds to the safety of both horse and auto drivers, has caused bitulithic paving to make a remarkable advance in public favor.

Property owners in Pocatella are enthusiastic advocates of its merits as the practical, economical pavement which will withstand all tests of traffic and climatic conditions.
