Things We Think
Things others think, and what we think of the things others think.

If advice wasn't given away free a lot of people would have a big stock of shelf-worn goods.

A knocker never yet drove a nail to help build an institution that would make the world better.

It would be interesting to know where paragraphs got their jokes during the time of Adam, who had no mother-in-law.

The high tariff fellows are too modest. They want to cover to much.

A man with several divorced wives is merely a polygamist on the installment plan.

Every man can make his mark if he will only work and wait until election day.

Pretty soon someone will be declaring the ten commandments unconstitutional.

A newspaper is the only circulating medium that is always worth more than par.

Reformers are hot after the opium curse in China, and the Chinese are taking the cue.

Don't squeeze you best girl too hard. She may turn out to be a lemon.

The trusted employe is always the man who attends to someone else's business.

Taft's ideas naturally carry a great deal of weight.

Close friends are not the kind you want in time of need.

The man who keeps pounding away isn't always the knocker.

Many boozefighters are joining the army of temperance reform.

There should at least be a stable market for hay, oats and corn.
