Things We Think
 Things others think, and what we think of the things others think.

A person would take an awful whack at an enemy sometimes if he thought he could do it without being found out.

An eastern college has abolished football. Higher education is getting some hard knocks.

When a fellow's in a terrible stew making a quick change of vestment for an evening party, that's likely as not to be the time he'll pull out a new shirt with about forty pins in it that must be carefully removed before the garment can be gotten on.

For years women have been wearing dresses made almost entirely of tin and have supposed that they were wearing silk. Women who would no more think of carrying a dinner bucket down the street than of flying or who wouldn't deign to soil their soft and lily white hands by handling the kitchen dishes, have been promenading the streets wearing a dress made of some one's old wash boiler or dishpan—for scientists tell us there is much more tin than silk in the goods passed over the counters these days for silk. Isn't it horrifying.

When Eve said she had no clothes to wear she voiced a genuine complaint.

Few people ever become sufficiently satisfied with their supply of worldly goods to be able to tell some folks the things they would like to.

Just because you were married by a minister is no reason why you should have it in for the church of which he is pastor.

The more things a person gets to make him happy the more he has to worry about.

The person who is always trying to get something for nothing gets an awful stinging once in awhile.

Sometimes it is pleasant to a young man to have a young woman sit down on him, and sometimes it isn't—it depends whether she does it figuratively or with her figure.

A newspaper that gives you twice as much as some other paper is worth twice as much. Are you getting your money's worth? That's the vital question.

Cupid is no respecter of persons.

You can't expect to make a success of life unless you make up your mind that you are as good as the next fellow.

No advice should be despised if honestly given. The mark of the successful man is not in refusing to listen but in being able to judge correctly whether it is worth anything or not.

Some folks marry in haste and never get a move on afterwards.

Some folks will attract more attention as a corpse than they ever have in life.

We have seen wives who didn't think their husbands amounted to a row of pins until some other woman wanted them.

There are a lot of men who think they know more than the boss who have had better opportunities to start with than the boss ever had.

Every person knows whether he's as good as he should be or not. Very few will answer yes—and they will know they are fibbing when they say it.

Do not break the furniture over your husband's head—use something less expensive.

It's not very much of an accomplishment to be able to tell how it happened.

Sitting up after all the rest have gone to bed, after childish lips have lisp'd "Now I lay me" and the sand man has closed baby eyes, after childish prattle is stilled and nothing but the monotonous tick tock of the time piece on the shelf or hurried footsteps of late revelers passing the house break the stillness of the night, a peculiar something wells up inside the father as he sits in the big arm chair with his Lady Nicotine blowing wreaths of tobacco smoke and contemplating baby shoes scattered about the floor, baby garments hanging on chairs and empty baby dresses and knee trousers suspended from pegs behind the stove.

Some folks enjoy poor health.

The happiest person is the one who has just brought extreme joy to some one else.

Be selfish with your trouble—that is the unselfish way to do.

Don't imagine that you would be happy if all your present worries were wiped away—it's a mistaken idea.

"RATTLESNAKE KING" IS DEAD

Man With Most Peculiar Malady Known to Science Escapes from His Affliction.

Florence, Ore., June 16.—(Register Lane County Special.)—Luther King, known far and wide as "Rattlesnake King," and the subject of many newspaper stories that, while really true, always gave the impression of being the products of some correspondent's disordered brain, is dead, having passed away at the Glenada hospital Wednesday. The funeral was held Thursday afternoon, and he was buried at the Oddfellows cemetery.

On August, 1875, King was bitten by a rattlesnake while he was picking blackberries in the mountains of Idaho. He reached camp, extracted the poison, the wound healed in a few weeks, and for 20 years the incident was forgotten.

Then on the last day of July, 1895, he felt a peculiar irritation on the instep of the bitten leg, and the next morning the irritated spot was a running sore, rotten to the bone. All that month he slept from 18 to 20 hours a day, drank little, ate scarcely anything, and the normal functions of his body stopped. On the first of September, however, he got out of bed and called for something to eat, and by September 4 the sores were well.

After that, on the first of August of each year ever since, this peculiar state of coma has returned, and all the sores of the preceding years have revived, accompanied by a new one. There were 18 scars on his leg when he died.

Church Prays for Deliverance.

King was a member of the Evangelical Church of Florence, and last April the church held a special session, and prayed that the old man might be delivered this year from the curse that has so long oppressed him. Their prayers were answered, but it was death that brought deliverance.

For many years King has firmly believed that in some way the bite of the snake endowed him with reptilian characteristics that were manifested only at the time of his annual affection. "I'm just like a snake in August," he said to a friend last spring. "I shed my skin then. I eat nothing, and I sleep nearly all the time. And I'm poison like a rattlesnake. I believe that if I should bite you in August, you would die."

He had a strange superstition that when the sores reached the number of the snake's rattles, he would become normal again. He did not know the number of the rattles, however, and this often perplexed him.

Old Man Was Veteran.

The old man was a veteran of the Civil war, and drew a pension, which was his only means of support. He was an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at Roseburg for sometime, but returned to Florence two years ago, and has been here since that time. He has been failing rapidly this spring, and has seemed to dread more than ever before the recurrence of his peculiar annual malady. He was taken to the Glenada hospital, but all efforts to save his life were unavailing.

King has believed for the last year that he would never be able to survive another attack of the strange disorder, and has been in very low spirits, frequently making the prediction that his days were numbered, and that he would never see another winter.

He leaves a son and a daughter, but it is not known where they are, as they have not been heard from for many years.

Some months ago Dr. John B. Leiber of Leaburg wrote the Register citing similar cases of recurrent breaking out of snake bites that had come under his observation in the Orient. As a youth he spent two years with his father when engaged in hunting pirates among the islands of the Formosa channel. In these villages they often found persons suffering from eruption similar to those endured by Rattlesnake King, and these, they were told, were caused by the bite of a snake called, using the literal English translation, "Great Corkscrew Dragon."

Three years ago a Portuguese surgeon at Maeco told Dr. Leiber that the disease is not at all uncommon in the Chinese hinterland, and Dutch physicians at Batavia say it is common among the Japanese.
