MAKING A UNIFORM

It Was For the Czar, and He Wanted It In a Hurry.

A SCARED CRIMEAN TAILOR.

When Pounced Upon by His Majesty's General, Who Cloaked His Mission in Mystery, the Knight of the Shears Thought His Time Had Come.

By special permission of the court authorities an amusing account is published of the circumstances attending the ordering of a military uniform by the czar from a little tailor in the Crimea, Khaim Kurichkess by name, who lived at Simferopol, the headquarters of the Crimean dragoons.

When the imperial family came to Lividai, and some days before the annual fete of the Crimean dragoons, the czar told the colonel that he had in store a gift for him and the regiment—the czarina had consented to become their chief. His majesty added: "I shall be there when you and your officers are presented to the empress and shall wear your uniform. The only thing is, I believe I haven't the uniform of the regiment. But that doesn't matter, there is time, if you hurry, to have one made. You seem to have an excellent tailor. Your uniform fits beautifully. Who made it?"

The colonel gave the name of Kurichkess, whereupon his majesty asked him to arrange that Kurichkess should make a uniform for himself, adding, smiling, "Tell him to do his best and to turn it out as well as yours."

There is next given a seriocomic description of the alarm occasioned among the Kurichkess household, consisting of father, mother and nine children, when a handsome motorcar stopped outside their door and a cloaked general officer descended.

The general said in staccato sentences: "You must come with me. Don't be frightened. You'll know later where I'm taking you. I can't leave without you. We've lost much time already. Get dressed quickly."

The tailor obeyed, went with his captor and was absent for four days. Mme. Kurichkess was doubtful whether she was a wife or a widow.

Eventually the tailor turned up safe and recounted his adventures. The drive with the general had lasted two hours and a half. During the whole journey the general did not address a single word to him. When they reached their destination, Yalta, all he said was, "Khaim Kurichkess, get out and follow me."

He was assured that he need not be alarmed; he would be provided with lodging and with food, and the next day he would be told why he had been brought to Yalta and what he had to do. He was told he need not try to escape, as he would be watched.

His fears dissipated when a colonel entered the room, and the "general of generals" addressed him to the following effect:

"Great good fortune has fallen upon you. His majesty the emperor wishes you to make for him a uniform of the Crimean dragoons. But it must be as good as that of the colonel of the regiment. I hope you won't make a mess of it. I will take you at once to the palace, where you will be admitted to the czar's study to see his majesty's figure."

When the "general of generals" took Kurichkess to the czar's study his majesty was standing reading a document with his back to the door. Some minutes elapsed before he turned around. In the meantime Kurichkess was rooted to the floor.

The czar on realizing his presence faced him and said: "Oh, you are here already! You are Khaim Kurichkess, the tailor. I want you to make me a uniform of the Crimean dragoons. Do your best and see that it is a good fit. Get to work at once."

Kurichkess went on to describe how God had helped him in his work and how satisfied the czar had been with the uniform and thanked him for it.

Kurichkess refused to accept anything in payment, but "his" general insisted that, according to law, he was obliged to receive 50 rubles for his expenses. Moreover, the general added, the minister of the court was aware that Kurichkess was in debt, and he gave the tailor an envelope containing 300 rubles from the minister to discharge his obligations.

Kurichkess was driven back in a motor to Simferopol, and some days later an imperial messenger brought to his shop a case containing a gold watch and chain. The double eagle was engraved on the watch, which also bore the inscription, "To Khaim Kurichkess for Zeal."—Argos.

A "Lady" Is Defined.

The definition of a gentleman has puzzled many, but what of the lady? A depositor on opening an account described herself as a factory hand. When withdrawing money she gave her description as "lady." The postmaster was asked to be careful as to identity before paying the money. His reply was, he was quite satisfied—it was the depositor's way of saying she was out of work.—London Spectator.

Two Classes.

"The human race is divided into two classes—those who go ahead and do something and those who sit and inquire, 'Why wasn't it done the other way?'"—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

He is the freeman whom the truth makes free, and all are slaves beside.—Cowper.

Four and Five Generation Pictures

F R E E

The Sentinel wishes to add to its already wonderful photographic collection some four and five generation pictures. The photographs of old residents displayed on the walls of The Sentinel office have attracted attention and much favorable comment on a climate that will grow such good-looking old people has been made by visitors in the city. We would like to add 25 four and five generation pictures to this collection. We will pay the expense and give one free picture for the trouble. Just go to Armstrong's and have it charged to us.

THE PROFIT IN HOGS

THE OREGONIAN

The Prairie ranch, located a few miles southeast of Fossil, Wheeler County, shipped a carload of hogs to the Portland Union Stockyards a few days ago and they topped the market, selling for 94 cents per pound. There were 79 head in the car, their combined weight was a trifle more than 20,000 pounds, or an average of almost 250 pounds. The check given in payment, after deducting freight, feed and commission charges, was for $1823.32. That shows a net price of $23.08 per animal.

Mention was made in these columns a short time ago of a former shipment of hogs from this ranch, and it was then stated that a carload would be sent to the Portland market about every two weeks during the balance of the year, there being about 2300 head feeding on this and other ranches owned by the same company.

The hogs just shipped had eaten, all told, about twelve bushels of grain each and about 250 pounds of ground alfalfa. Aside from this, they had been fed nothing, but had, of course, been pastured on alfalfa, stubble and grass. The grain fed them as pigs and hogs would be worth today at the ranch where it was fed not to exceed $7 per animal; the alfalfa meal perhaps $2.50 per animal. It cost to haul them to market, we will say, about $40. That makes a total cost of $790, to which must be added the cost of producing the pigs. Two dollars and a half each would be a fair figure for this. In fact, if any breeder with ample facilities for keeping a large number of brood sows could sell his day-old pigs at that figure he would never carry them along even to shoo days.

We find the seventy-nine head of hogs cost in real cash outlay $990, which does not include the indeterminate expenses of labor and ranch expenses, including taxes, interest, etc. It is impossible to figure such costs, but the surplus shown by the above figures, $833.23, is surely ample to give a large profit. Suppose the company keeps up its semi-monthly shipments during the balance of the year and each carload does as well. That would make ten carloads and a profit of $8333.20. As there are now more than 2000 head of hogs on the ranches of the company, the shipments will probably continue the year round.

Compare these figures with the grain business. Suppose in place of feeding their 35,000 to 40,000 bushels of grain to hogs they had hauled it to Condon, the nearest railroad point. Or suppose the road was already built to Fossil and they hauled the grain there, say an average haul from the three ranches of fifteen miles. The wheat fed this last carload of hogs weighed 56,880 pounds; the fattened hogs weighed but 20,000 pounds.

The point is just this—feed more of the grain to livestock. Our sheep-owners are in a terrible flurry about the tariff on wool. Let them try to forget it and build their business along new lines—better wool and better mutton and more of each. That means grain-fed sheep, and why not? We can produce as good mutton as is grown in the world, and we ought to double and treble our output and raise the quality until we control the markets of the West.
