WHEN YOU BUY A TICKET TO THE THEATER.

By WALTER K. TOWERS, A.B., J.D., of the Michigan Bar

If you desire to ride to the next town and possess the wherewithal to purchase a ticket, the railroad company is bound to sell you the ticket, and having sold the ticket must allow you to enter its trains and ride to your destination, unless you chance to be in such a condition that it is not proper that you should ride with other passengers. If you wish to send a telegram the telegraph company has no option but to send it if you are able to pay and it is a proper message. This is because these enterprises are public in their nature and all of the public must be served without discrimination. But the owner of a place of amusement is in a different position. One might readily suppose that the theater is public in its service as is the railroad or telegraph, but before the law it stands in a different position. The rights of the theater owner in dealing with those who come to his place of amusement are rather favorable. He stands more upon the plane of the merchant engaged in a private enterprise, who may sell or refuse to sell to whom he will.

"The manager or proprietor of a theater," said a New York judge, "has the right to say who shall enter his place of entertainment and who shall not, or what class of people shall be entitled to do so, and what class shall not. This necessarily follows from the fact that his enterprise is a private one, and not public and because, while he may entertain the public at large, if he sees fit, he is under no obligation to do so."

In the case from which the foregoing opinion was quoted a leading dramatic critic in New York city had been excluded from certain theaters by the managements, and the court sustained the rights of the managers to refuse admission to whomsoever they chose, for whatever reasons.

Thus, in general, a theater proprietor, before the law, is held to be engaged in purely private enterprise which he may conduct as he sees fit. He may cancel performances at his pleasure.

The view of the law is that the sale of a theater ticket by a theater is the issuance of a mere license to attend a performance, and this license may be revoked by the management. Even after the holder of a ticket has been admitted to the theater, but before he has taken his seat, the management may revoke the license and require that the holder of the ticket leave the theater. If he refuses he may be lawfully ejected, provided no more than necessary force be used. The holder of the ticket who is refused admission may only recover the cost of his ticket and such expenses as he was put to in reaching the theater—in other words, his direct financial loss. In a few cases, where a patron was ejected without adequate reason, damages were allowed for the insult offered, but this is not generally done, especially where the management had any reason for revoking the right to attend the performance which the ticket holder has purchased.

If, through a mistake, a patron is given a ticket calling for the wrong seat or gets into the wrong seat, he may be required to change to another seat, and if he resists and causes a disturbance he may be forcibly removed. Unless he becomes disorderly, however, he may not be ejected from the theater.

While a theater is a private enterprise the state may, nevertheless, exercise a wide degree of control. It may censor the entertainment offered through proper officials. Thus a moving picture house may be required to show its films before an official censor and secure its approval before displaying them to the public. Sunday performances may be prohibited, safety and sanitation insisted upon, etc., etc.

In some states the legislatures have regulated the right of a theater to refuse to sell tickets to whom it will. In such states the rights of theater goers are increased by the privileges and rights granted by special law. In not a few states this legislation has been aimed to prevent any discrimination against negroes, and where state legislatures have so acted the courts have enforced these laws. Illinois, for instance, has specifically enacted that no theater may deny admission to anyone because of race or color, or bar them from any class of seats. Where such a statute exists, the theater management no longer has the broad right of refusing admission to whom it will, which was spoken of above.

The activity of the ticket speculators is a phase of this question that is of no little importance to the theater-going public. Law makers and theater managers have joined in efforts to stamp out this evil, yet not with complete success. That the judges have not all looked upon ticket speculation as an evil is shown by the following quotation from a judicial opinion:

advance upon the original purchase price, or the business of reselling such tickets at a profit, is no more immoral or injurious to public welfare or convenience, than is the sale of an ordinary article of merchandise at a profit. It does not injure the proprietor of the theater; he must necessarily have parted with the ticket at his own price and upon his own terms before such resale can be made. It does not injure the second buyer; he must have had the same opportunity as the first buyer to purchase a similar ticket, and no greater right thereto; and having neglected that opportunity, or being unwilling to undergo the necessary inconvenience, and willing to pay a higher price rather than forego the privilege which the other by his greater diligence and effort has obtained, the transaction is just so far as he is concerned. The fact that such tickets are obtained and resold at an advance does not compel the manager of the theater to put the tickets upon the same plane as ordinary articles of merchandise. He can make them non-transferable, and place in the contract of sale any conditions necessary for the protection of himself or his patrons, and by printing such conditions on the tickets, he can prevent their resale to innocent buyers."

As the judge points out, the theater management may make their tickets non-transferable and by refusing admission to a second purchaser prevent any resale of the tickets. If the attention of the purchaser is drawn to such conditions, by signs in the theater lobby and a notice printed on the tickets, such conditions may be enforced against him.

The theater management owes to its patrons the duty of seeing that the premises are in a reasonably safe condition. It is bound to see to it that the building and all the fittings and appliances are in proper condition for public use. If any injury occurs to a patron which was due to a failure on the part of the management to keep the theater in proper condition, the person injured may recover in damages.

While theaters have been here generally referred to, it is to be noted that all places of public amusement fall within the same rules of law. The circus, the museum, the picture show are all in the same class with theaters, in viewpoint of the law for all ordinary purposes.

Road Bonds Benefit Farmer

MEDFORD MAIL-TRIBUNE

Some Jackson County farmers, living in isolated districts, object to the proposal to bond the county for constructing a county highway because their own property does not abut on the highway and it does not mean an improved highway to their doors.

The viewpoint is a narrow and selfish one, for what benefits one section of the county directly, indirectly benefits all sections. Moreover the proposed highway benefits a greater number of people than any other road expenditure possibly could, and all the other people will indirectly benefit thereby.

Courthouse records show that for many years the bulk of the money spent on roads in Jackson County has each year gone onto this one road—and it is still going upon it. With this road cared for by the bond issue and out of the way, the money hitherto annually spent upon it, can be used for the improvement and construction of lateral lines and isolated highways.

In other words, with the main county highway provided for, money will be available for county roads. If the bonds do not carry, there will be slight chance for the construction or improvement of these other roads, for this one road will continue to absorb the bulk of the annual tax levy.

Another feature to be considered is the county court's contract with the federal government for the improvement and subsequent maintenance of fifty miles of rural mail routes in the valley. This fifty miles of road has hitherto taken about all there was in the general road funds hitherto spent on the trunk line, and postal roads will, if the bonds carry, be available for remoter sections, and make possible expenditures in the Applegate, Rogue River, Butte Creek, Antelope and other regions of sparser population.

Thus, the farmer who votes for the bond issue is not only voting the county its greatest improvement, but is also voting for needed road improvements in his own locality, which cannot be made until the main county highway is out of the way.

TIMBER GUARDS MAKE GOOD RECORD

Total Destruction for Season Is Only 3,000,000 Feet Valued at $5,000.

A total destruction of timber by fire of only about 3,000,000 feet, worth less than $5000 against the previous lowest record of 20,000,000 feet in 1911, is the record of the Pacific Coast Forest Protective Associations, which patrol more than 20,000,000 acres from the Montana Rockies to Northern California, containing one-fifth of the nation's entire timber supply, according to reports compiled yesterday by the Western Forestry and Conservation Association for the season up to September 30, usually considered the end of serious fire danger. State and government protective agencies report equal success. There has been practically no loss in the national forests. Damage to logs and camp equipment by slashing fires also is the lowest on record, being estimated at $10,000.

The year is reported to have been much safer than 1902 and 1910 and perhaps a little safer than 1911, but worse than 1912, and about like the average of other years in the past. About 2500 fires worthy of report were extinguished by the combined patrol forces.

The Western Forestry and Conservation Associations regards 1913 as a test year which shows protective facilities now perfected to a point which, together with greater care by public, loggers and railroads practically insures safety in the normal season.

It is announced today that all private, state and government forest protective agencies in the Western United States and Canada will hold a forest fire conference in Vancouver, B. C., December 15 and 16, to discuss patrol and fire fighting methods and particularly plans for close cooperation in 1914.

Making Bread That is Good and Wholesome.

"Bread should be in flavor sweet and nutty and the odor should be the same as the flour. It should be so completely baked that, when pressed it immediately springs out upon release of pressure. The color should be golden brown, top, sides and bottom. The loaf should be evenly raised with no cracked, protruding or uneven crusts. The bread when cut should have a soft, velvety texture, all harshness absent. It should slice smoothly without crumbling. The holes should be numerous, small and of uniform size. The color should be a slightly creamy white," says Mrs. Henrietta W. Calvin, dean of the School of Domestic Science and Art, Oregon Agricultural College.

While everyone knows good bread from bad, it is not everyone that knows how to apply the principles required to secure the many details that constitute good bread. The details are simply and entertainingly given by Mrs. Calvin in College Bulletin No. 83, Extension Series 3, just issued by the Extension division.

Any housekeeper who feels like trying to make bread of the appetizing kinds described and is not quite sure of the process, may secure a copy containing the easily followed directions by addressing R. D. Hetzel, Extension Division, O. A. C., Corvallis, Oregon. Other bulletins of this series are principles of cake making and principles of jelly making.

Snake Swallows Snake; PUP CHEWS BOTH

A little yellow shepherd pup and two snakes were the combinations that caused Claude Davis, driver for a local dairy, to glean a little sunshine out of his otherwise very exacting job a few mornings ago.

The scene was in the Hots Springs addition. The driver discovered the pup sparring around in the weeds at the side of the road and grabbing at something until his interest was so piqued that he alighted from his wagon to investigate the cause.

He found one yellow looking snake had attempted to swallow another one almost as large as itself and that about the time his first snakeship had swallowed his meal down until only a few inches of the tail stuck from its mouth the pup had come on the scene and was having sport with the victor. The swallowed reptile was almost as large as the swallower and the latter had apparently had considerable trouble in getting his meal down. But the pup made short work of the victor by chewing it into a pulp.—Klamath Falls Northwestern.
