Masher Gets His.

There is one would-be masher and fresh young fellow in Klamath Falls who will be sure that the next girl he accosts on the street is not talking to a husky relative.

Tuesday evening a young man was standing on the street talking to his niece, who is an attractive young lady. As he passed a would-be masher, although a stranger to her, said: "Hello, kid." He no sooner got the words out of his mouth than the uncle squared off and almost put him to sleep with a right hook to the jaw.

And the uncle did not stop at one jab at the masher but continued to land on him as fast as he could get to his feet. When he was tired of hammering the "sport" the uncle then allowed the young "lady killer" to slink away with an admonition not to do it again.—Klamath Falls Northwestern.

At the Salem state fair, which has just closed, the most prosperous session ever held, Douglas County took first prize for the best county display, forcing Benton County, five times winner of the annual contest, to take second place. The decision was a very close one, the judge having been for some time undecided as to which display was the best, the splendid showing of corn in the Douglas County booth being the final deciding factor. Clackamas County was third, Washington County fourth, Linn fifth, Tillamook sixth and Polk County seventh. Certainly no better county exhibits have ever before been made at the state fair.

After several years of litigation involving claims in the Siletz country, the announcement has just been made that the settlers have finally been victorious and that patents to the land will immediately be issued by the government. With all uncertainty as to the future removed development will certainly proceed with great speed. The railroads have long been anxious to tap that rich timber section, and they are now free to go ahead with the work.
