WHY HE IS A CANDIDATE.

After having repeatedly stated that because of lack of time, he felt the honor should go to an older resident, and for other reasons, he could not become a candidate, the receipt of many urgent requests from prominent Eugene men, and the presentation of the following petition caused Elbert Bede, editor of The Sentinel, to enter for a member of the lower house of the Oregon Legislature: Cottage Grove, Ore., March 9, 1914.—Mr. Elbert Bede, Cottage Grove, Ore.—Dear Sir: We, the undersigned voters of South Lane county, respectfully request of you, that you announce yourself as a candidate for Representative in the Oregon State Legislature, and that you make an active campaign to that end, and we, on our part, promise our support at the polls and otherwise that may appear necessary:

FARM MANAGEMENT.

Agriculture Should Be Handled as the Merchant Handles a Store.
By ANDREW BOSS,

Chief of agronomy and farm management, Minnesota agricultural experiment station.

Farm management, in its best interpretation, means the application of progressive, scientific and business principles to the business of farming. The farm manager holds the same relation to the farm and its business as does the business manager of the store or other business enterprise—that is, he is the one responsible for the success or failure of the enterprise from the financial point of view; therefore he must know every detail of crop growth, of cost of production, of marketing, of operating and of all business transactions performed in connection with the farm.

Farming is a business, and the one who can grow the largest crops of the best quality and at the same time produce them at the lowest cost, sell them at the highest price and make the best investment of the money received should rank as the best manager. While farming has not commonly been regarded as a business, the fact remains that the successful financial operation of a farm presents even a more complex problem and involves at least as much business ability and tact as are required in operating a store.

A farmer must have a knowledge of the elements of soil fertility, of the principles of the movement of soil water, of soil bacteria and their action, of plant growth, of varieties and species of plants, of the effect of one crop on the crop following and of the care of the seeds and forage. He must also understand animals and how to feed and care for them, and in addition he must know how to buy and sell to advantage, to make contracts, plan his buildings and farm so as to economize labor and distribute it to advantage.

The farm manager who would successfully conduct his business may profit by the example of the merchant.

The merchant takes an inventory of his stock, considers the demand for his goods, both present and prospective; notes the supply and cost of each article of commerce, the labor required to operate his business and any other items of expense that may be legitimately to the business, regulating his purchases and prices accordingly.

The farm manager should likewise take an inventory of his capital stock and equipment. He should consider the fertility of the soil and the demands that will be made upon it by the crops grown, the sources from which fertility may be renewed and at what cost; he must study the markets and demands for the various crops and the possibility of handling them at a profit, the cost of producing each of the crops and the probable net profit that will be returned; the labor supply, the interest on investment and similar expenditures which must be made that affect the final result. Large farms may likewise be organized into departments and accounts kept with the crops, the pigs, the grain crops, the garden and similar enterprises. The business statement at the end of the year will then show which lines have been most profitable and will enable the manager to drop out those that are unprofitable.

TIMELY POULTRY NOTES.

Cabbages, beets and mangels make ideal greens for hens during the winter. Small potatoes and specked apples are also relished, particularly when the fowls are confined to their indoor quarters.

To keep the hens healthy provide a dry floor, plenty of dry litter, plenty of dry air and no draft; keep the house clean, feed well, water regularly and provide a constant supply of artificial grit, oyster shells, cracked bone and charcoal.

Hens should be dusted with insect powder occasionally, but the presence of a good dust bath will make these necessary occasions far fewer. Mix about one pound of powdered sulphur with each bushel of dust for the best results.—A. C. Smith, Poultryman, University Farm, St. Paul.
