Woman's World

Roumanian Avatrice Who Seeks American Trophies.

MISS HELENE CARAGIANI.

From the beautiful and romantic land of Carmen Sylva comes Miss Helene Caragiani, a daring woman aviator, who hopes she will return home to win many trophies away from the American aviators, with whom she wishes to compete.

Miss Caragiani brings her own aeroplane with her and spends all her spare time in practice. She believes that women make quite as skillful and daring aviators as men. She herself has made many notable ascensions abroad.

Speaking of the possibilities of crossing the Atlantic ocean in an airship, Miss Caragiani said:

"If men wait much longer some woman will take the trip before them."

Miss Caragiani makes no secret of the fact that she would like to be the woman to do so.

Suspender Gowns.

Suspenders of various sorts are in fashion. There are many skirts this spring with suspenders to wear with separate blouses. Some of them are made of the wonderful new plaid taffetas. Sometimes the suspenders are wide and worn quite at the edge of the shoulders, and sometimes they are narrow. Sometimes they are fastened to an odd little waistcoat belt—a belt like the lower part of a waistcoat, including sometimes two diminutive pockets well toward the front.

The plaid taffetas are expensive, and, although it does not take much to make a skirt with suspenders, still the required amount of taffeta would cost $11 or $12—the silk is about $3 a yard in a width of which almost four yards are needed. But there are cheaper plaid silks than taffeta that can be substituted for it. These suspender skirts in silk of plain color will also be seen. They are very useful, for they can be worn in warm weather with thin blouses and without coats, at the same time giving their wearers a feeling of being completely dressed.

Curtaining Casement Windows. The picturesque casement window requires a simple treatment. Each window is done separately, with sheer, although not necessarily, expensive material.

The curtains should be shirred to a rod—that is, set inside of the frame if the window swings out and on the sash if the window swings in. If there is a group of windows a valance across the top, with draperies on the outside edge, is often the only curtaining.

Shades are not generally used, but if they must be added they should be hung inside and when not performing their mission of giving privacy arranged so they may be rolled up out of sight.

Binding Seams.

The raw edges of seams should be either bound with this silk seam binding or carefully pinked on the edges by snipping them in little V shaped pieces with the scissors. If working with material that frays easily, such as serge and some of the loosely woven silks and woolen materials, all seams should be oversewn or "whipped" on the edge. The armholes of an unlined blouse should be bound and those of a lined bodice whipped.

Homemade Window Pole.

Take an old broom handle. Paint it to harmonize with your room and insert at one end a screw hook. Screw into the upper sash of each window in the room a ring screw for the hook on the pole and your window pole is ready for immediate use.

This will save you from having to run about the house looking for a window pole or climbing on chairs to reach the sashes every time you wish to raise or lower a window.

Use For Empty Cans.

Tin cans in which one has bought meat or fruit make fine roofing for sheds or henhouses. When empty cut or melt off the bottoms and hammer them out flat. Then nail them on to the framework just as you would shingles or slates. Tar the whole inside and out, and you will have a water tight and practically everlasting roof.

For the Children

An Animal Trainer and Her Pet Kids.

Although New York city is the second greatest in the world, there are large sections within its confines where houses are few and woodlands and farms make up the landscape. Such a place is the town of Woodside, in Queens borough, on Long Island. On the outskirts of this little town there has been for some time an animal training farm. Wild beasts from all over the world are received there and tamed. It is said by some who have been permitted to visit this institution that harsh methods are in vogue. For instance, a newly imported lion is beaten with iron bars and cowed by punishment. Happily this is not the method of the little girl here pictured. She believes and practices the idea of gentle ways. She is a daughter of one of the wild beast trainers and has been brought up among animals. Her way of training is by love. The two little kids are examples of her kindly ways with animals. They know she is their friend.

A Diamond Explosion. Sounds rather astounding, does it not?

And yet, according to an expert who gave a lecture before the Royal Society of Arts, London, diamonds are quite likely to explode.

He quoted various instances of diamonds exploding on being taken from the diamond fields and said that such an explosion might occur years after being released from the mines. So don't aggravate your diamonds!

Diamonds are supposed to be formed through the fusion of carbon at great temperature under such pressure as could exist only at great depths below ground. The expert remarked that by the time the precious stones had worked their way up near the surface through volcanic disturbances and within grasp of the miner the great pressure was gone.

A Canal Underground.

The most remarkable canal in the world is the one between Worsley and St. Helen's, in the north of England. It is sixteen miles long and underground from one end to the other. Throughout Lancashire the coal mines are extensive, and many years ago the Duke of Bridgewater's managers thought they could save money by transporting the coal underground instead of on the surface. So the canal was constructed and the mines were connected and drained at the same time.

Ordinary canal boats are used, but men furnish the power. On the roof of the tunnel arch are cross pieces, and the men who do the work of propelling the craft lie on the coal on their backs and push with their feet against these crossbars on the roof.

Famous Persons.

If your friends come to spend an afternoon or evening with you play the game of "Famous Persons."

Prepare in advance photographs of famous people, labeled with names that do not belong to them. Then hand these about among the company for correction. What seems easy at first will be difficult and will tax the memory of your "party."

You can buy penny pictures of famous statesmen, painters, musicians and authors.

The one naming the most pictures correctly should get a prettily framed picture for a prize.

A Famous Bell.

One of the most interesting and perhaps finest toned bells to be found in Europe is the "Kaiserlocke," which is hung in Cologne cathedral. It is comparatively small as regards size, being only a little over twenty-seven tons in weight. The curious fact about the "Kaiserlocke" is that it became so badly cracked in 1875 that it had to be recast, and for this purpose the metal of a number of French cannons captured during the war of 1870-1 were used.

Manufacturers Demand Cessation of Freak Legislation.

The Lane County Manufacturers' Association closed its county exhibition by voicing unanimous protest against laws crippling industries and development of the state. Col. Hofer responded for the press of the state, and declared there was a strong feeling of distrust among newspaper men as to the advisability of any more restrictive legislation. He cited the nation-wide distribution of canned pineapple at $1.00 per dozen to the retailer, when Oregon peaches and other canned fruit of the same grade sold at $2.00 to $3.00 per dozen. The pineapple is put up and grown by cooley labor with no restrictions as to hours, and no minimum wage law. Manager Holt of the Fruit Growers' Association said freight rates, power problems, prices of raw material could all be dealt with but the uncertainties and unsettled conditions caused by legislation they could not cope with. Vice-President A. J. Kingsley pointed out the difficulties created by the Workingmen's Compensation Act, and said that unless it was changed large factories could not come under it. A. Norman of the Pacific Light & Power Co. showed that Oregon had the raw materials and the transportation for distribution of products and facilities to get abundance of labor. He said: "All that is needed is capital. Capital must know that it is safe from confiscation when put out. It must be sure of a reasonable and certain return, and must not be taxed out of existence. There must be an end of harassing legislation." R. W. Raymond, manager of the manufacturers' Association, said Oregon was getting fifty per cent less colonists than a year ago, while California was getting twenty per cent less.

He pointed that shipments now going to Portland in the future go to Astoria, and Eugene would some day occupy the same place as a distributing point that Portland does now. He got a good round of applause when he said the manufacturers of the state would be before the legislature and present a solid front against any more industrial legislation. He announced the formation of a new commission to conduct an industrial survey of Oregon.

Commonwealth Conference at U. of O. Today, tomorrow and Friday a large and representative gathering of the successful men of affairs of the state is meeting at the University of Oregon and discussing the problem of the larger life of the state. To this meeting all citizens of the state are invited. This is the sixth of the series of commonwealth conferences and promises to be the most successful of them all, as each succeeding year has been more successful than the one which went before. To quote from the notice of the meeting sent out over the state, "community service and commonwealth service, with all-working together all of the time, using the best instrumentalities of science and the wisest expert counsel the state affords, characterizes this movement that has gradually been gaining strength during the last five years."
