CLOTHES HANGERS.

Their Variety and Convenience Should Banish Wrinkles From Garments.

If the closet room is small make the most of it by having a bar placed on which the hangers can be hung. Of course, the sort of hangers used must have hooks big enough to get over the bar. The bar can be bought. Sometimes it is made of nickel. A broom handle, of course, must be sawed off and the handle secured firmly at each end to the closet walls, lengthwise of the closet. A bar three feet long will accommodate at least a dozen frocks and coats on hangers.

An emergency peg for the camper can be made from a clothespin. Saw off the prongs of the pin, leaving just the knobby head—two or three inches long. Through the middle of the end of the knob drive a long, strong wire nail, longer than the piece of clothespin. Fasten this securely in a board on the wall, and you have a peg that will not tear the things hung on it.

Some dainty new clothes hangers are these: Two little clamps to clamp over the band of a skirt or over the rim of the inside of the seams of the bodice are fastened to two pieces of ribbon, each six or eight inches long. Sometimes, to give additional strength, these ribbons are double. At the other end of each ribbon is a little bone ring which is to hang over the peg. The two rings are hung over different pegs and so hold the skirt or frock attached to the clamps in shape.

For the thin lingerie frock or waist a scented hanger is delightful. Any of the cheap hangers can be covered first with wadding in which the scent is sprinkled and then with figured lawn or with silk. A good way to cover a scented hanger is first to put on a silk or satin cover and over that to put a lawn cover which is in two parts, like two slips, to go over the two ends, fastened about the middle of the hanger with ribbons run through the hems. This slip cover can be washed to keep the hanger fresh and clean.

NEW BED COVERS.

Choose One of the Dainty New Creations of Cretonne or Dimity.

Very charming are the bed covers made of plain crep or cotton taffeta upon which are applied garlands of flowers cut from chintzes or cretonnes.

Such a spread was shown in a lavender and gray room. The bed itself was of gray enameled wood, embellished with a narrow white line.

The bed cover was of pale gray rep the color of the bed, upon which was applied lavender cretonne flowers. This same cretonne appeared again as window hangings.

The cotton spreads may be had in cream, tan, dull blues or any other neutral tint which can be made to tone in with any color scheme. They are quite expensive when made by an upholsterer or bought from a decorator, but any woman who is clever with her needle could make one.

Dainty dimity bed covers are also shown, either in plain white or cream or with narrow stripes in color. They are made long enough to tuck under the roll. Occasionally one sees separate slips, into which a round bolster may be slipped. The covers hang down the floor, the two sides at the bottom being split to allow the corners to lie flat.

With very sheer material a deep flounce sometimes appears. On wooden beds the cover merely touches the wooden sides. When a roll or bolster is used, slipping pillows are tucked away out of sight during the day and are only placed upon the bed at night.

It is almost a necessity to have a couch in one's bedroom, for a bed to remain immaculate should never be used for lounging or resting on during the day. No guest room should be without such a convenience.

A Season of Colors.

You can buy wigs dyed to match any sample of material you may take to the dyer and wig seller. You may buy stockings dyed within twenty-four hours to match exactly a frock or slipper of a most unearthly hue. And now you can have smelling salts made to match any samples you take to the chemist who puts up smelling salts. They may be colored yellow to match the odd shade of the hangings in your bedroom or boudoir, or a strange shade of lavender to match your Japanese crape negligee, or a queer green to match one of the new shades you have chosen for your summer suit.

Plant Lavender Seeds.

Those who like sachets of dried lavender in their linen closets and bureau drawers may raise all of the delicate flowers they can use by planting the seeds in a shallow box filled with finely sifted soil. When the tiny plants are a few inches high transplant them in small flowerpots and when the ground is warm set them out of doors. Two or three plants will yield all the lavender one will be likely to use.

Feeding and Literary Genius.

H. G. Wells is among those who believe that indigestion is an aid to successful authorship. Some years ago when called upon to answer the question, "What is the first step toward literary production?" Mr. Wells replied, "It is imperative if you wish to write with any power or freshness at all that you should utterly ruin your digestion." Victor Hugo appears to have done his best to bring on indigestion. Edmond Lockroy states in his memoirs that it was Hugo's invariable custom when served with crayfish to devour the head, claws and tail and to swallow the skin and plps whenever he ate an orange.

Connection between feeding and literary genius is commented on by Robert Sherard in his "Modern Paris." Theophile Gautier, himself enormous, maintained that a man of genius should be fat and for proof pointed to "that more barrel than man," Balzac; to Alexandre Dumas, "always fat and jolly"; to the "hippopotamus in breeches," Rossini, and the plump and well fed appearance of Victor Hugo and Sainte-Beuve.

Old Scottish Sanctuary.

The old sanctuary of the abbey and palace of Holyrood house, to quote the full description, was an interesting institution. The debtor was free from arrest during the week. On entering the sanctuary he enrolled himself in a formal manner and obtained a room—that is, if he could pay for it. There was a public house within the boundaries and it was not uncommon to see the debtor in the inn playing dominoes and his creditor standing looking in at the window with wistful eyes. The debtor was safe, and he knew it. And the face of the creditor told the same tale. Sunday being a dies non, the debtor could leave his sanctuary and visit his family, but he had to be careful to get back to Holyrood on Sunday night. Sometimes a debtor had the temerity to leave on a week day, but he did so at his peril.—London Spectator.

Surprise in Africa.

Rev. Dr. W. S. Ballou recently described an African sunrise, as he noted it, in the "blue black African night" of Mount Kilimanjaro. He explained how the first blood red shaft of daylight shot over the peak and stained the clouds black of the mountain.

"Impossible as it may seem," he said, "that red stain dripped down and not up and spread toward the horizon. It spread right and left until the mountain, still as blue black as the night, stood out in a dreadful silhouette. Then came the steaming mists of the morning, and at first red and then pink and then silvery and then auken they covered the mountain after the dawn, and it was as though it had never been. Nowhere but in Africa. No where else."—New York World.

Winter's Short Days.

If I were to paint the short days of winter I should paint two towering icebergs approaching each other like promontories for morning and evening, with cavernous recesses and a solitary traveler wrapping his cloak about him and bent forward against the driving storm just entering the narrow pass. I would paint the light of a taper at midday seen through a cottage window, half buried in snow and frost.

• • • In the foreground should appear the harvest and far in the background through the pass should be seen the mowers in the fields and other evidences of spring. On the right and left of the approaching icebergs the heavens should be shaded off from the light of midday to midnight with its stars, the sun being low in the sky.—Henry David Thoreau.

Electromagnets.

An electromagnet consists, essentially, of a core of soft iron surrounded by many turns of insulated copper wire through which a powerful electric current is made to flow. When the current starts flowing the iron instantly becomes a magnet, and when the current is shut off the iron just as instantly loses its magnetism. An electromagnet can be made much more powerful than a permanent magnet of steel, and it is also much more useful, because its magnetism may be turned on and off at will. It is indispensable in making telegraph instruments, and in recent years it has become hardly less indispensable as a kind of giant derrick hand for picking up tons of steel and iron and depositing them wherever they are wanted.—New York Journal.

Reason to Worry.

"You look scared."

"I guess you'd be if you were as sick as I am."

"Pshaw! You're not seriously sick."

"I didn't think I was, either, but I can see that the doctor is beginning to worry over my case."

"He's worrying, all right; he told me that he didn't expect you'd pay him unless he brought suit."—Houston Post.

Knew a Whole Lot.

A youthful and blushing bride reduced the aged grandmother of the groom of her choice to a state of collapse last week, says the Sydney Bulletin. When asked if she could keep, she replied with simple modesty, "Not very well, but I know that you bake inside the stove and boil on the outside."

Above Ancestry.

It is fortunate to be of noble ancestry. It is more so to be such that people do not care to be informed whether you are noble or ignoble.—La Bruyere.

Never suffer the prejudice of the eye to determine the heart.—Zimmerman.
