ROSE FESTIVALS.

These Are Ideal Ways of Entertaining the Little Folks.

OUTDOOR PARTIES POPULAR.

Plenty of Ramping and a Delicious Feast Served on the Porch or in Tents Help to Make and Keep the Kiddies Amused and Happy.

The lawn or garden party affords mothers of small boys and girls an ideal way of entertaining in summer. Indoor parties for the kiddies are apt to be noisy affairs, and unless all breakables are removed before the guests arrive there are apt to be accidents to bric-a-brac and pictures.

Given a large and attractive porch and a lawn of moderate dimensions, the settings for the affair are delightful. If the garden is one of ample size the little folks may be given a splendid party. Swings and hammocks may be provided. Croquet and tennis, if there is a court, may be played by the older children. Japanese and Chinese paper lanterns make suitable decorations.

The refreshments may be served on the porch or in tents put up on the lawn.

A rose party is just the kind to have in the month of June, when these blossoms are full blown. If the refreshments are served from a special table the color scheme for this should be pink. A great bowl of roses may ornament the center of the table. A grape paper cloth decorated with roses and rose sprinkled napkins of paper may be used.

A very pretty effect is obtained from the use of dollys and a centerpiece of rose patterned cretonne or chintz, as the edges can be pinked. They will serve from time to time and please children more than lace or embroidery.

Rose postal cards may be used for the invitations to a rose party. An other way is to cut sprays of roses and leaves from wall paper and paste them on fine bristol board, cutting that out and writing the invitations on the plain side.

If you are giving a very large party for children and you feel that the entertainment of them is too much for you it would be wise to engage a kindergarten teacher to assist, as such a one is experienced in the work and would come for a small price. There are also innumerable games for children and other simple means of entertainment which any mother could successfully conduct.

Suggestions for the party menu need scarcely be made at a time when so many fresh fruits and vegetables are available. There may be a fresh vegetable salad garnished with sliced cold boiled eggs and mayonnaise dressing. Strawberry shortcake should appear on the table and if it is a birthday a cake with candles.

For the two latter the Boston Cooking School Magazine gives the following timely recipes:

According to this authority, a very fine strawberry shortcake is thus made: Sift together two cupsful of sifted pastry flour, half a level teaspoonful of soda, a slightly rounding teaspoonful of cream of tartar and half a teaspoonful of salt. With two knives work in one-third cupful of shortening; then mix to a soft dough with milk and spread the mixture smooth in two buttered pans about seven and a half inches in diameter. Bake about twenty minutes. Spread the smoothest side of each cake generously with butter, put plenty of sugared berries on each and set one above the other. Pipe whipped cream above and surround with sugared berries. The cake will be at its best if the berries cut in halves are mixed with sugar half to a full hour before serving.

The birthday cake shown here is set in a ring, to which the candles are affixed. Instead of, as usual, being placed on the cake. This handsome cake is made as follows: Cream two-thirds of a cupful of butter, gradually beat in one cupful of sugar, one cupful of hickory nut meats chopped, the beaten yolks of three eggs, one cupful of milk, three cupfuls of sifted flour, sifted again with two slightly rounding teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and lastly the whites of three eggs beaten dry. Bake in a well greased pan with tube about forty-five minutes. When cold cover with confectioner's frosting and decorate with bottled frosting. Use a plain copper tube for stems, the leaf tube for leaves and a small five pointed tin tube for the blossoms.

These are ideal ways of entertaining the little folks.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Baby Girl Who Is Being Taught Not to Be Afraid.

COURAGE A FINE QUALITY.

Oliver Whitman, Daughter of a Noted Lawyer, Schooled in Fearlessness. Hardworking Animals—Many Things to Interest Children.

Not long ago Mrs. Charles S. Whitman, wife of the district attorney of New York city, flew a thousand feet above the Hudson river in a flying boat. These boats can go on water or in the air, as the driver wishes. When Mrs. Whitman entered the machine she put on a life preserver, because one never knows whether there may be an accident or not. At any rate, she sat beside the driver, and after skimming along the Hudson river for a short distance the machine flew into the air at a speed of seventy miles an hour. After reaching a height of a thousand feet the driver brought his machine back to the surface of the water. Volplaning is the term used by aeronauts.

When Mrs. Whitman alighted from the machine she said she had experienced no fear. "I used to be afraid of the water," she said, "but I overcame that fear. I dislike to have fear of any kind, and I am teaching my little girl not to have a fear too."

Mrs. Whitman is a prominent charity worker in New York city, where she was born. Before she was married she was Miss Olive Hittcock. Her only daughter's name is also Olive, and when the little girl grows up, if she responds to her mother's teaching, she will be brave like her mother. It is a good thing for children to cultivate courage and to be fearful only of doing wrong.
